Jim The Story of a Backwoods Police Dog Charles G. D. Roberts,2015-02-18 Example in this ebook I HOW WOOLLY BILLY CAME TO BRINE S RIP I Jim s mother was a big cross bred bitch half Newfoundland and half bloodhound belonging to Black Saunders one of the hands at the Brine s Rip Mills As the mills were always busy Saunders was always busy and it was no place for a dog to be around among the screeching saws the thumping wet logs and the spurting sawdust So the big bitch with fiery energy thrilling her veins and sinews and the restraint of a master s hand seldom exercised upon her practically ran wild Hunting on her own account in the deep wilderness which surrounded Brine s Rip Settlement she became a deadly menace to every wild thing less formidable than a bear or a bull moose till at last in the early prime of her adventurous career she was shot by an angry game warden for her depredations among the deer and the young caribou Jim s father was a splendid and pedigreed specimen of the old English sheep dog From a litter of puppies of this uncommon parentage Tug Blackstock the Deputy Sheriff of Nipisiwaska County chose out the one that seemed to him the likeliest paid Black Saunders a sovereign for him and named him Jim To Tug Blackstock for some unfathomed reason the name of Jim stood for self contained efficiency It was efficiency in chief that Tug Blackstock as Deputy Sheriff was after He had been reading in a stray magazine with torn cover and much thumbed pages an account of the wonderful doings of the trained police dogs of Paris The story had fired his imagination and excited his envy There was a lawless element in some of the outlying corners of Nipisiwaska County with a larger element of yet more audacious lawlessness beyond the county line from which to recruit Throughout the wide and mostly wilderness expanse of Nipisiwaska County the responsibility for law and order rested almost solely upon the shoulders of Tug Blackstock His chief the Sheriff a prosperous shopkeeper who owed his appointment to his political pull knew little and thought less of the duties of his office As soon as Jim was old enough to have an interest beyond his breakfast and the worrying of his rag ball Tug Blackstock set about his training It was a matter that could not be hurried Tug had much work to do and Jim as behoved a growing puppy had a deal of play to get through in the course of each twenty four hours Then so hard was the learning so easy alas the forgetting Tug Blackstock was kind to all creatures but timber thieves and other evil doers of like kidney He was patient with the long patience of the forest But he had a will like the granite of old Bald Face Jim was quick of wit willing to learn intent to please his master But it was hard for him to concentrate It was hard to keep his mind off cats and squirrels the worrying of old boots and other doggish frivolities Hence at times some painful misunderstandings between teacher and pupil In the main however the education of Jim progressed to a marvel They were a pair indeed to strike the most stolid imagination let alone the sensitive brooding watchful imagination of the backwoods Tug Blackstock was a tall spare figure of a man narrow of hip deep of chest with something of a stoop to his mighty shoulders and his head thrust forward as if in ceaseless scrutiny of the unseen His hair worn somewhat short and pushed straight back was faintly grizzled His face tanned and lean was markedly wide at the eyes with a big well modelled nose a long obstinate jaw and a wide mouth whimsically uptwisted at one corner To be continue in this ebook
