Two Cultures of Policing John Leo,2017-09-08 The emergence and functioning of two competing and sometimes conflicting cultures within police departments demonstrates how competition between street cops and bosses is at the heart of the organizational dilemma of modern urban policing Unlike other works in this field that focus on the monolithic culture or familial quality of policing this study demonstrates that which might look cohesive from the point of view of outsiders has its own internal dynamics and conflicts The book shows that police departments are not immune to the conflict inherent in any large scale bureaucracy when externally imposed management schemes for increasing efficiency and effectiveness are imposed on an existing social organization Based upon two years of extensive field work in which the author covered every major aspect of policing at the precinct level in the New York City police department from manning the complaint desk to riding in squad cars Ianni shows how the organized structure of the police department is disintegrating The new Management Cop Culture is bureaucratically juxtaposed to the precinct level Street Cop Culture and bosses loyalties to the social and political networks of management cops rather than to the men on the street causes a sharp division with grave consequences for the departments The study concentrates on a series of dramatic events such as the suicide of a police officer charged with corruption a major riot and the trial of an officer accused of killing a prisoner while in police custody Ianni traces how these events affected relationships among fellow officers and between officers and bosses

Dobratz, 1977-01-01 A truly unique compilation World Perspectives in the Sociology of the Military explores both age old and contemporary issues pertaining to the sociology of military institutions and civil military relations. At the same time it deals with major conceptual, research, empirical, and methodological issues in the field of sociology devoted to military aspects. A concise overview with a sociological, political science framework and a perspective utilizing international factors is provided along with analyses of the major issues of the internal dynamics of military organizations as these issues are reflected in evolving military organizations around the world. The interrelationship between social and political change and the military and the way the armed forces responds to and internalizes these changes are also fully treated. The principal focus is on the concepts of professional and organizational perspectives and of civil military relations. Comparative international factors are provided by chapters on African, European, Middle Eastern, Latin American, and United States militaries and also included is a section devoted to the methodological aspects of the measurement of military intervention in developing nations. In Part I the editors have written an integrated overview and sociological framework for analyzing and critically assessing military sociology. Part II explores the internal dynamics of military organizations with an emphasis upon professionalism, politics, recruitment, and socialization. Larson first provides an excellent discussion of two major interpretations of military professionalism and civic control. In the following contribution, career patterns and occupational structure is the topic and Lang notes that technological and organizational developments in the U.S. military have led to a shift away from combat orientations to resource management. While technological change has had important effects on the American military, Gamier warns against generalizing about the effects of technology on other militaries; he argues that changes in the technology can be mediated by cultural and organizational factors. Kourvetaris and Dobratz address themselves to the issues of social recruitment and political orientation of officer corps in fourteen countries; they find that the broadening of the social base of recruitment has not been followed by a concomitant process of political democratization of the officers' political attitudes and/or behavior. Lucas delineates the nature and content of the military images important in the professional socialization of Army ROTC cadets. Cockerham's research on airborne paratroopers argues against the importance of the socialization process; using interview data he analyzes the context of airborne socialization in the United States as a status passage. Ben-Dor outlines a behaviorally oriented theoretical approach to the study of military intervention in the Middle East to begin Part III. Likewise, Thompson advances a synthetic approach for explaining Arab military coups along systemic and subsystemic dimensions of military and civilian structures and regimes. Event data from a number of sub-Saharan African nations were researched by McKown who suggests analyzing elite political behavior in order to explain the cause of coups d'état. In particular, she recommends further examination of the variables of elite cohesion and coercive ability and potential. Segal et al. explore the thesis of convergence and suggest that the emerging pattern for industrial nations of the West may be one of divergence. Convergence can be seen as making the military functionally more independent of its host society and therefore insulated from it. Using Moskos's developmental construct of convergent, divergent, and segmented patterns of civil military relations Kourvetaris traces the linkages between armed forces and society in the context of the military role in Greek politics both in diachronic and synchronic terms Drury assesses the effectiveness of military rule in Brazil during 1964-70 and Herspring provides background information on socialist countries while considering the effect that an increasing reliance on modern technology has had on civil military relations in East Germany Sigelman examines five indicators of the extent of military intervention and derives his own Military Intervention Index The final contribution by Tannahill discusses new operationalism of military intervention and provides an application of this new variable in the context of military intervention in Latin America

The Policing Web Jean-Paul Brodeur, 2010-09-30 Nearly all research devoted to policing focuses on public uniformed police and their legal use of force An overwhelming amount of this work draws on evidence from Anglo American police forces These twin emphases have led to a limited view Agencies such as criminal investigation units intelligence services private security companies and military policing organizations have almost entirely escaped scholarly attention In The Policing Web Jean Paul Brodeur looks at policing as a whole He illuminates its full diversity showing how it extends far beyond the confines of public police working in uniform and visible to all Brodeur considers military policing both when it complements the values of democracy and when it does not He also discusses criminal individuals acting as police informants and criminal organizations enforcing their own rules in urban zones deserted by the police Brodeur argues that the diverse strands of the policing web are united by a common definition that emphasizes the license granted to policing agencies legally or with impunity to use means otherwise forbidden to the rest of the population Employing an international and comparative approach Brodeur establishes a comprehensive model that links all the components of policing The policing web however is not a neat and well integrated structure There is not just one policing web There are several depending on the country police history and culture and the various public images of policing These often overlooked factors are essential components of the context of policing Wide ranging and authoritative The Policing Web expands the very idea of what policing is and how it works and presents a novel yet fundamental understanding of law enforcement

The Fragmentation of Policing in American Cities Hung-En Sung, 2001-11-30 The relationship between police and the communities and citizens they serve has long been a topic of study and controversy Sung provides a place oriented theory of policing to guide strategies for crime control and problem oriented policing He contends that community policing is a product of power relations among communities Sung also explores how police and citizens interact with each other in stratified and residentially segregated communities how services are delivered by police how citizens respond to those charged with protecting them and enforcing the law Illuminating the police neighborhood and advancing a clear hypothesis for explaining and predicting changes in police behavior this both provides a conceptual platform for public policy debate planning and evaluation of police public safety and democratic governance According to Sung place has everything to do with the success of community policing and the attitudes of both police and citizens contribute to the success or failure of police initiatives as well as the level of crime inherent in a community By focusing on the social and political forces that shape the residential patterns of American cities and the organization of police work Sung provides a theoretical framework for considering the relations between police and citizens in different neighborhoods He concludes that current modes of police community relations and crime prevention will improve only if the policies adopted encourage the transformation of marginal communities into communities where citizens feel a shared responsibility for maintaining and peace and order This unique contribution to a growing field of study provides an ecological theory of police citizen relations that begins with the inequality and segregation inherent in many American cities
