

5 STUDENT RETENTION STRATEGIES IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Best Practices for Keeping Students Engaged and Enrolled in 2024 and Beyond

A shifting economy, the risk of significant debt, and rising personal support challenges leave many students questioning whether college is right for them. While the national student retention rate has returned to pre-pandemic levels, enrollment continues to decline at four-year institutions. Given this challenging landscape, institutions must strive to retain every student they enroll.

Colleges and universities must highlight the benefits of staying enrolled and provide tangible support to make continued enrollment feasible for all students. Higher education leaders can proactively address retention by understanding and tracking signals of attrition and developing new strategies to help students engage and thrive.

THE RISING COST OF ATTRITION

The retention rate for students was 67.2% between fall 2021 and fall 2022, a modest return to pre-pandemic levels.

Source: National Student Clearinghouse

Despite a stabilized retention rate, the total number of undergraduate and graduate students continued to decline by -0.5% and -2.2% in spring 2023.

Source: National Student Clearinghouse

The average financial loss attributed to attrition for an undergraduate institution is more than $9.8 million, based upon a tuition of $18,297.

WHY STUDENTS LEAVE

While students have always cited financial or time-related reasons for withdrawing from college, students in recent years are citing a wider array of reasons for abandoning their studies, including changes in their personal motivations, their health, and their sense of belonging.
