- When a company enters a foreign market, it must first determine the country's political, economic, and cultural environment. This process is called environmental scanning. It involves gathering information about the country's political, economic, and cultural environment. This information is then used to develop a strategy for entering the market.
- Each entry strategy has its own set of advantages and disadvantages. For example, exporting is a low-risk strategy, but it may not be the most profitable. On the other hand, direct investment is a high-risk strategy, but it may be the most profitable. The company must weigh the pros and cons of each strategy and choose the one that best fits its needs.
