upper level, while the pendulum bell in the shape of a bellows behind a glass, can be seen through the hour. Surmounting the whole structure is a handsome figure under an umbrella, while the edges of the lower canopy are hung with bells, these being held at each corner by a winged figure. The two canopies and the hour are formed of a marble casing, covered with intricate foliate decoration, the same material being used for all the other masses. The clock is by 'G. F. (British & Paris)', probably David Fontaine of that name, who was active in 1760 and was listed as Rue St-Hippolyte (1784-9) and Rue de Baille by 1830.

It is worth digressing at this point to consider a clock with features so strikingly reminiscent of those that grace existing monuments in the Grand Reception Room at Windsor Castle. Surmounting each case is a person, while the clock cylinder, supported and surrounded by foliage, has an enameled Chinese figure on either side. These are one and a woman on the other. The composition is further embellished with richly wrought enamel scrolls and dragons, the hands on the dial are decorated as curiously twisted scepters, and each case sits upon a large round plate base. The latter must represent some notion as, were they solid mass, they must be ponderous, but it seems likely that they are intended to echo other less material. As for the clock, it was made in a workshop by Tulliamy. Both objects were made in the order of George IV for the Pavilion at Brighton and removed to Windsor upon the accession of Queen Victoria.

French clocks in historical and mythological settings

A mythological theme which seems to have been particularly popular in France in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and which, to judge by the purchases he made from successful representations of it, must also have found great favour with George IV, is the story known as 'The Rape of Europa'. In this, the god Zeus has been represented by the beauty of Europa the young daughter of the Phoenician king. He appears to her on the waters of the gulf of a bull. The animal seeming to be tame and docile, her attention has been attracted to it with flowers, and then Europa, secretly during daylight hours, is taken to Crete. It is said that
