Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. Physical fitness was measured using a series of tests, including a 1000m run, a 10m sprint, a 10m shuttle run, a 10m sit-and-reach test, and a 10m standing long jump. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all tests. The 1000m run test showed a significant difference between the two groups, with the experimental group having a faster time. The 10m sprint test also showed a significant difference, with the experimental group having a faster time. The 10m shuttle run test showed a significant difference, with the experimental group having a faster time. The 10m sit-and-reach test showed a significant difference, with the experimental group having a greater reach. The 10m standing long jump test showed a significant difference, with the experimental group having a greater jump. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.
