Sports Cardiology R. Fagard, I.E. Bekaert, 1986-06-30 Participation in athletics at both the recreational and competitive levels has grown enormously over the last decade and now involves a substantial segment of the population of many countries particularly those in Europe and North America This change in the life style of many individuals has been accompanied by the desire and necessity on the part of physicians to define the consequences of chronic athletic training and competition to the participant Coincident with the of public interest in sporting competition has been the evolution and growth development of new non invasive technologies in cardiology such as M mode and two dimensional echocardiography and radionuclide angiography which have permitted investigators to study directly and more precisely the morphology and function of the heart and cardiovascular system Hence over the past several years our knowledge has been greatly enhanced with regard to the features of the normal athlete heart and the relationship of athletic conditioning to preexistent cardiovascular disease as well as the causes of sudden death in athletes The present treatise on Sports cardiology Exercise in Health and Cardio vascular Disease is an impressive reference document which is also timely It fulfills an important role in summarizing most of the available data that has been accumulated over the last 10 years in a large number of athletes participating in a variety of different sports Drs I Bekaert and R

Third International Conference on System Science in Health Care W. van Eimeren, R. Engelbrecht, C. D. Flagle, 2012-12-06 In the early stages of planning the Third International Conference in System Science in Health Care the steering committee members most of whom had participated in the first conference in Paris 1976 and the second in Montreal 1980 made some basic decisions about organization of subject matter The earlier meetings had been very successful in bringing together specialists from the health professions and the traditional sciences In addition to physicians and nurses these were representatives of the disciplines of the behavioral sciences system theory economics engineering and the emergency fields of management science and informatics all concerned with the development of health resources in a broad system context The reported research and experience of the many disciplines represented had dealt with one or more of three concerns 1 a major health problem such as cardiovascular disease or an important population at risk such as the elderly or children or workers 2 some generic aspect of organization and decision making including trial and evaluation of innovative health strategies and 3 the methodology of research and analysis in system of health service The challenge to the conference organizers lay in the eliciting and arranging of experiences in such a way that the health services could be seen as purposeful living evolving systems
