SHE HAS NO PLACE IN PARADISE

A groom is filled with dread at his upcoming wedding ceremony in which his motherhood will be tested. His fear of his mother turns to hate and hatred for the young unknown bride he is obliged to marry. This story of power and impotence is the first in a new collection which brilliantly exposes the relationship between individuals in today's society. A man is terrified to speak the truth to men more powerfully placed than he; a woman knows nothing of the feelings her well-tried husband's friend has for her; discovering her emerging sexuality is a teenage father's with her education and fear of her father; a waiter, between food and for information, is emphasizing a woman that the essential core of himself can withdraw and survive.

Written by one of Egypt's leading writers, this latest volume of modern short stories on sexual politics follows Nawal El Saadawi's excellent earlier volumes, Death of an Ex-Minister about which reviewers commented:

"Finely judged and chilling in their matter-of-factness" canberra

"Highly turned political insights... fascinating characters" canberra

"Powerful stories that are written simply and directly, making them all the more poignant and startling" canberra

"They're brilliant... The writing is subtle and sensitive and the translation is excellent" canberra

A collection of remarkably controlled, provocative and well-written stories" canberra
