Tingley, 2010 Ecology of the Northern Goshawk in the Sierra Nevada, California John Joseph Keane, 1999 This dissertation describes the migration status annual home ranges nest site habitat characteristics and the association of biotic and abiotic factors with annual variation in reproduction of northern goshawks Accipiter gentilis in the Lake Tahoe region of the Sierra Nevada California during 1991 1995 Northern goshawk reproduction was greatest in years with abundant late winter early spring Douglas squirrel populations Tamiasciurus douglasii following high cone crop production the previous autumn and mild late winter early spring temperatures These results are consistent with the prediction that carnivorous bird species exhibit an increased demand energetic strategy and require increased energy prior to breeding in order to successfully reproduce Northern goshawks are year round residents in the study area Breeding period home ranges 95% adaptive kernel estimates based on radio telemetry were 2016 ha sd 1690 for females and 2698 ha sd 1043 for males Nonbreeding period home ranges were 5555 ha sd 3289 for females and 9379 ha sd 6821 for males Home ranges did not differ between sex during either the breeding or nonbreeding periods Nonbreeding period home ranges were significantly larger versus the breeding period for both males and females Northern goshawk nest sites had significantly greater canopy cover 5m height live trees in the 60 100 cm and 100 cm diameter at breast height dbh classes and dead trees in the 60 100 cm dbh class Correspondingly random sample points had significantly greater herbaceous rock and shrub sapling cover and live trees in the 5 30 cm dbh class compared to nest sites Logistic regression analysis indicated that canopy cover live trees 100 cm dbh and shrub sapling cover were the best predictors of northern goshawk nest site habitat Adapted from abstract

Pavlik, 2020-05-26 This riveting account of one of the most notable personalities of the mountain climbing world reconstructs the life of legendary mountaineer Norman Clyde 1885 1972 He made his mark on history with more than one hundred and thirty first ascents throughout western North America and many believe he knew the High Sierra better than anyone else including John Muir. Part of his mystique comes from participating in high profile mountain rescues and recoveries in which he is credited with saving a number of lives. Those who had the good fortune to meet him often with a ninety pound pack on his back that included an anvil for boot repair, fishing rods, cooking pots, and books in Greek and Latin, never forgot the experience. Biographer Robert C. Pavlik uses Clyde's own words along with recollections from his family, friends, fellow climbers, and acquaintances to capture the experiences of a remarkable man and a bygone time between the pioneers and the rock climbers.
