The Warrior Image Andrew J. fact Huebner shows cracks began to appear in sentimental images of the military late in World War II and were particularly apparent during the Korean conflict Journalists filmmakers novelists and poets increasingly portrayed the steep costs of combat depicting soldiers who were harmed rather than hardened by war isolated from rather than supported by their military leadership and American society Across all three wars Huebner argues the warrior image conveyed a growing cynicism about armed conflict the federal government and Cold War militarization

Contagions of Empire Khary Oronde Polk,2020-04-17 From 1898 onward the expansion of American militarism and empire abroad increasingly relied on black labor even as policy remained inflected both by scientific racism and by fears of contagion Black men and women were mobilized for service in the Spanish Cuban American War under the War Department's belief that southern blacks carried an immunity against tropical diseases. Later in World Wars I and II black troops were stigmatized as members of a contagious venereal race and were subjected to experimental medical treatments meant to curtail their sexual desires. By turns feared as contagious and at other times valued for their immunity, black men and women played an important part in the U.S. military's conscription of racial gender and sexual difference even as they exercised their embattled agency at home and abroad. By following the scientific, medical, and cultural history of African American enlistment through the archive of American militarism, this book traces the black subjects and agents of empire as they came into contact with a world globalized by warfare.
