

This "Precious Dust"

When the Battle of Stones River ended on January 3, 1862, more than 20,000 Union and Confederate soldiers lay dead. Most were buried in hastily prepared graves on the battlefield. In December 1862 soldiers from the new United States National Cemetery began the arduous and gruesome task of disintering the bodies of the Union soldiers and reburial them here in newly spruced Stones River National Cemetery.

By April 1863 what Captain William Farnsworth called "the precious dust" of more than 10,000 soldiers had been brought here for reburial. Included were not only soldiers killed at Stones River but others who had died elsewhere in Middle Tennessee. Of these, 1,400 are unknown. The Confederates died, not rightly the burial in national cemeteries, were taken to their home towns or to public cemeteries in nearby Massachusetts.

Captain William Farnsworth left his command of the 10th Maine Infantry to help with the reburial of Union soldiers killed at Stones River. In 1863, the Stones River National Cemetery was established to bury the Union soldiers who died at the battle of Stones River.

[These were] men who had given their lives for the cause, eager to strike the death blow to the rebellion. Now they lay cheering as they passed to the front, where they fell in the midst of the grand old Army of the Union, and here they lay in the green sod of our beautiful cemetery, on the shores of the field of Stones River.
