This book is intended to be a contribution to the philosophy of politics, its presumed audience composed primarily of political theorists. So much should be apparent from the title, but the point nonetheless needs to be made and reiterated. For as the reader will see, I shall be spending a fair amount of time dealing with matters only indirectly related to politics, including and especially generic problems in the philosophy of action and the philosophy of mind. This would seem to make for a perhaps odd work of political thought, but there are reasons for it.

I believe that much contemporary theorizing about politics presupposes – sometimes expressly, often not – a particular range of positions that have become influential in the recent philosophical literature and that purport to have powerful implications for our understanding of human conduct, broadly conceived. Such positions emphasize the noncognitive and nonreflective aspects of practical judgment and practical action – they reject what is variously called the “intellectualistic fallacy” or the “myth of the mental” – and promote, thereby, a decidedly non-intellectualist and non-rationalist account of our active engagement in the world, including engagement that we would think of as skilled or highly accomplished. This general point of view has been embraced by a variety of otherwise unconnected or loosely connected philosophical perspectives, including analytic theories of knowing-how and knowing-that, neo-Heideggerian approaches to the phenomenology of everyday life, materialist conceptions of mind, so-called affect theory, and explorations of the putative difference between “thinking fast” and “thinking slow.” Exactly how such materials have come to influence recent theorizing about politics is not always clear. Occasionally, the connection has been direct and specific; explicit ties between political theory and serious philosophical inquiry – though, as I will suggest, profoundly attenuated – have not been entirely severed. More often, however, we seem to be talking

Varieties of Liberalization and the New Politics of Social Solidarity Kathleen

Thelen, 2014-03-31 This book examines contemporary changes in labor market institutions in the United States Germany Denmark Sweden and the Netherlands focusing on developments in industrial relations vocational education and training and labor market policy It finds that there are in fact distinct varieties of liberalization associated with very different distributive outcomes Most scholarship equates liberal capitalism with inequality and coordinated capitalism with higher levels of social solidarity However this study explains why the institutions of coordinated capitalism and egalitarian capitalism coincided and complemented one another in the Golden Era of postwar development in the 1950s and 1960s and why they no longer do so Contrary to the conventional wisdom this study reveals that the successful defense of the institutions traditionally associated with coordinated capitalism has often been a recipe for increased inequality due to declining coverage and dualization Conversely it argues that some forms of labor market liberalization are perfectly compatible with continued high levels of social solidarity and indeed may be necessary to sustain it

Unemployment provides a thorough comparative analysis of the present situation. It looks at how the orthodox unemployment policies of contemporary governments have failed and what new policies might be introduced. A number of radical unemployment policies from Germany, France, Italy, Britain, Spain, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, and the EU are outlined. These are investigated with a view to identifying the conditions under which they might become standard components of national and EU strategies to bring down unemployment. This book is the first comparative study of the politics of policy innovation in the area of unemployment. It will be an important addition to the literature of European public policy and important reading for students of comparative European politics and economics. The New Politics of Immigration and the

End of Settler Societies Catherine Dauvergne, 2016-03-21. This book analyzes the contemporary politics of immigration from the asylum crisis to Islamophobia, multiculturalism, and post colonialism. The New Politics of North Carolina

Christopher A. Cooper, H. Gibbs Knotts, 2012-09-01. Political scientist V O Key in 1949 described North Carolina as a progressive plutocracy. He argued that in the areas of industrial development, public education, and race relations, North Carolina appeared progressive when compared to other southern states. Reconsidering Key's evaluation nearly sixty years later, contributors to this volume find North Carolina losing ground as a progressive leader in the South. The new politics of the state involves a combination of new and old. New opportunities and challenges have forced the state to change, but the old culture still remains a powerful force. In the eleven essays collected here, leading scholars of North Carolina politics offer a systematic analysis of North Carolina's politics and policy placed in the context of its own history as well as the politics and policies of other states. Topics discussed include the evolution of politics and political institutions, the roles of governors, the judicial branch, interest groups, and party systems, and the part played by economic development and environmental policy. Contributors also address how geography affects politics within the state, region, and nation. Designed with students and interested citizens in mind, this collection provides an excellent introduction to contemporary North Carolina politics and government. Contributors: Hunter Bacot, Elon University; Christopher A. Cooper, Western Carolina University; Thomas F. Eamon, East Carolina University; Jack D. Fleer, Wake Forest University; Dennis O. Grady, Appalachian State University; Ferrel Guillory, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill; Sean Hildebrand, Western Carolina University; Jonathan Kanipe, Town Manager, Catawba, North Carolina; H. Newmark, Appalachian State University; Charles Prysby, University of North Carolina at Greensboro; Ruth Ann Strickland, Appalachian State University; James H.
