Presidentialization Of Politics A Comparative Study Of Modern Democracies:

The Presidentialization of Politics Thomas Poguntke, Paul Webb, 2005 This book examines the changing role of political parties and political leadership in fourteen modern democracies As well as examining cross national differences it also analyses how modern democracies are increasingly following a presidential logic of governance Provided by publisher

The Personalisation of Politics Lauri Karvonen, 2014-12-01 With the weakening of the structural determinants of politics in Western democracies it is commonly assumed that individual politicians and politicians as individuals have come to mean more for voter behaviour and party choice Many observers argue that politics has become more personalised in the course of the last few decades Although considerable research on the various aspects of personalisation has been carried out no single study so far has approached the question from a broad comparative perspective By examining four central dimensions of personalisation institutions candidates party leaders and media and by including data from most stable parliamentary democracies this book attempts to fill part of that gap The book demonstrates clearly that there is no linear trend towards more personalisation among the cases studied From the point of view of the general personalisation thesis the findings are mixed at best in some important respects they are negative While the media tend to focus more on individual politicians the idea that party leaders increasingly determine the party choice of voters finds little support in empirical evidence Most researchers seem to agree that the position of the prime minister has become more dominant A closer look at comparative evidence results in a more complex picture There has been a certain tendency to develop the most party centred electoral systems in a more candidate centred direction On the other hand recent reforms have altered some of the most candidate centred systems in the opposite direction Individual candidates seem to mean more to voters in systems where preferential voting has been practiced for a long time This change is by no means dramatic nor does it seem to apply to other electoral systems Karvonen shows that the personalisation thesis while not completely erroneous has been overstated not just by the media but in some of the research literature as well

Comparing Westminster R. A. W. Rhodes, John Wanna, Patrick Weller, 2009-08-27 This book explores how the governmental elites in Australia Britain Canada New Zealand and South Africa understand their Westminster system It examines in detail four interrelated features of Westminster systems Firstly the increasing centralisation in collective responsible cabinet government Second the constitutional convention of ministerial and collective responsibility Third the role of a professional non partisan public service And finally parliament's relationship to the executive The authors explain the changes that have occurred in the Westminster model by analysing four traditions royal prerogative responsible government constitutional bureaucracy and representative government They suggest that each tradition has a recurring dilemma between centralisation and decentralisation party government and ministerial responsibility professionalisation and politicisation and finally elitism and participation They go on to argue that these dilemmas recur in four present day debates the growth of prime ministerial power the decline in individual and collective ministerial accountability politicisation of the public service and executive dominance of the legislature They conclude by identifying five meanings of or narratives about Westminster Firstly Westminster as heritage elite actors shared governmental narrative understood as both precedents and nostalgia Second Westminster as political tool the expedient cloak worn by governments and politicians to defend themselves and criticise opponents Third Westminster as legitimising tradition providing legitimacy and a context for elite actions serving as a point of reference to navigate this uncertain world Fourth Westminster as institutional category it remains a useful descriptor of a loose family of governments with shared origins and characteristics Finally Westminster as an effective political system it is a more effective and efficient political system than consensual parliamentary governments Westminster is a flexible family of ideas that is useful for many purposes and survives even thrives because of its meaning in use to elite actors scholarly knowledge this should result in unstable governments and a bad economy This is not the case however since Denmark has a rather stable political system and a strong and robust economy among the strongest in Europe How The Danes have continued reservations towards the EU despite close to 50 years of EC EU membership and the Danes rejected the Maastricht Treaty in 1992 Still the EU issue is handled in ways that do not call for large political battles How A third example is that Denmark used to be known as a tolerant and liberal society its Jews were almost all saved during German occupation during WWII Denmark was the first country to free pornography and the first country to formally register same sex couples Yet recent Danish politics has also been associated with xenophobia and anti Muslim sentiments Why
