

The Presumption of Guilt

THE REPORT of the Tucker Committee (Cmd. 479) was recently published to a waiting world, and a vague decision was reached in the drawn-out battle between "The Freedom of the Press" and the sanctity of "The Presumption of Innocence." Hearings in camera were frowned upon, but a recommendation was made that only the barest details, i.e. the identities of the Court, of the accused, the legal representatives and the charge, should be published whenever committal proceedings are reported . . . otherwise newspaper reports might prejudice prospective jurors and "The Presumption of Innocence" be thus destroyed.

The members of the Tucker Committee undoubtedly did all that was asked of them but they did not include in their considerations the full impact which a modern Police Force has made upon English Criminal Law. From their conclusions, the reader might believe that the greatest enemy to "The Presumption of Innocence" is the newspaper report of summary proceedings. But, while it must be recognised that newspaper reports may be influential, there is a stronger factor which the Committee did not mention—the strongest factor, indeed, of all.

If we measure the decline of "The Presumption of Innocence" by means of words used by judges when addressing juries, it is possible to follow the slow undermining of the importance of that presumption with the establishment of, and improvement in, modern police methods.

In the early 19th century, before the creation of the Police Service, as we know it today, "The Presumption of Innocence" was a pillar of strength in the Criminal Courts. Judges went to great lengths to impress its importance upon juries. In 1823, for example, Holroyd, J., suggested that a gradation of criminality called for a corresponding gradation of the presumption, and said: "The greater the crime, the stronger the proof required for the purpose of conviction." R. v. Hobson (1823), 1.Lew. C.C.261. This is a somewhat dangerous doctrine which, logically, leaves "petty offences" needing little or no proof of either commission or guilt.

Some years later, however, R. v. Manning (1849), 30.C.C.C. Sess. Pap. established that, in fact, there is an automatic presumption against a crime even having been committed, and, in that case, Lord Chief Baron Pollock (referring to the rebuttal of "The Pre-

Presumption of Innocence in Peril Anthony Gray, 2017-11-08 This book explains the historical significance and introduction of the presumption of innocence into common law legal systems It explains that the presumption should be seen as reflecting notions of moral comfort around judgment of others Specifically when one is asked to make a judgment about the guilt or otherwise of a person accused of wrongdoing the default position should be to do nothing This reflects the very serious consequences of what we do when we decide someone is guilty of wrongdoing and is not a step to be taken lightly Traditionally decision makers have only taken it when they are morally comfortable with that decision It then documents how legislators in a range of common law jurisdictions have undermined the presumption of innocence through measures such as reverse onus provisions allowing or requiring inferences to be made against an accused redefining offenses and defenses in novel ways to minimize the burden on the prosecutor and by dressing proceedings as civil when they are in substance criminal Courts have too easily acceded to such measures in the process permitting accused persons to be convicted although there is reasonable doubt as to their guilt and where they are not guilty of sufficiently blameworthy conduct to attract criminal sanction It finds that the courts must be prepared to re assert the prime importance of the presumption of innocence only permitting criminal sanctions to be imposed where they are morally certain that the accused did that of which they have been accused and morally comfortable that the conduct being addressed is worthy of the kind of criminal sanction which prosecutors seek to impose Courts must be morally comfortable about the finding of guilt and the imposition of the criminal penalty in a given case They have lost sight of this moral underpinning to criminal law process and substance and it must be regained
