

operations on the environmental resources in Grand Canyon. The preferred alternative (modified low flow) that was selected in the operations EIS (BOR, 1994b) is very similar to the interim flow rules, but some modifications were made as a result of experience with operations during 1993 and 1994, as described below.

Experience with Interim Flows and Exception Criteria

The changes in daily operating rules have had no effect on the ability of the BOR to meet monthly or annual release targets because monthly release targets are totally independent of interim flow rules. It is, however, now much more difficult for the Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) to respond to hourly changes in energy load because of the constraints on both daily and hourly ramping rates (the rate of change in dam releases). Absolute enforcement of the revised operating rules would have decreased WAPA's ability to "meet system regulation needs, maintain transmission reliability, maintain operating reserve requirements, and serve firm load requirements" (WAPA, 1994). Therefore, in October 1991, WAPA and the BOR signed an interagency agreement. This exception criteria agreement allows WAPA to violate flow restriction rules not more than 3 percent of the time in any 30-day period (WAPA, 1994).

The range between the 20,000-cfs maximum and the 5,000-cfs minimum release limits appears to still allow substantial flexibility for response to changes in demand for hydropower. Because of the daily limits on ramping rates, however, the 15,000-cfs nominal range is reduced to 5,000 cfs in months with low-release targets and to 8,000 cfs in high-release months, as indicated in the following EIS preferred alternative section.

A recent example (one week in April 1995) of diurnal variations in both release rates and rates of change in release rates (ramping rates) are given in Figures 4.4 and 4.5. Clearly, the limiting parameter is ramping rate, not the 5,000- to 20,000-cfs bounds on release rate.

EIS Preferred Alternative

Operating criteria for the modified low-fluctuating-flow alternative, which was identified in the final EIS as the preferred alternative, are shown in Table 4.4.

Restoring Colorado River

Ecosystems Robert W. Adler, 2012-06-22 Over the past century humans have molded the Colorado River to serve their own needs resulting in significant impacts to the river and its ecosystems Today many scientists public officials and citizens hope to restore some of the lost resources in portions of the river and its surrounding lands Environmental restoration on the scale of the Colorado River basin is immensely challenging in addition to an almost overwhelming array of technical difficulties it is fraught with perplexing questions about the appropriate goals of restoration and the extent to which environmental restoration must be balanced against environmental changes designed to promote and sustain human economic development Restoring Colorado River Ecosystems explores the many questions and challenges surrounding the issue of large scale restoration of the Colorado River basin and of large scale restoration in general Robert W Adler evaluates the relationships among the laws policies and institutions governing use and management of the Colorado River for human benefit and those designed to protect and restore the river and its environment He examines and critiques the often challenging interactions among law science economics and politics within which restoration efforts must operate Ultimately he suggests that a broad concept of restoration is needed to navigate those uncertain waters and to strike an appropriate balance between human and environmental needs While the book is primarily about restoration of Colorado River ecosystems it is also about uncertainty conflict competing values and the nature pace and implications of environmental change It is about our place in the natural environment and whether there are limits to that presence we ought to respect And it is about our responsibility to the ecosystems we live in and use
