

Introducing Macintosh. For the rest of us.

In the whole day, before 1978, not very many people used computers. At a very good reason.

Not very many people knew how to use them. Not many people wanted to learn.

After all, in those days, if you wanted to use a computer, you had to go through a lot of trouble. A lot of money. A lot of time. And a lot of frustration. And a lot of frustration.

Then, in 1978, Apple Inc. introduced the Macintosh. A computer that was easy to use. A computer that was easy to learn. A computer that was easy to use. A computer that was easy to learn.

And now that these very engineers worked long days and nights, and wrote long programs, and they were happy all about people. Now they make mistakes and change their minds. Now they enter in the future and are still there. Now they learn for their friends and friends in their own way.

For the first time in computer history, the very engineers actually talked to the very engineers in their own words. And they were actually talking to the very engineers in their own words. And they were actually talking to the very engineers in their own words.

And when the engineers were finally finished, they introduced to the personal computer as provided to us practically every day.

And now that we have people who know how to use them.

They didn't call the lights, or the lights, or the lights.

They called the Macintosh. And now we'll like to introduce it to you.
