Beyond Sinology Andrea Bachner, 2014-01-21 New communication and information technologies provide distinct challenges and possibilities for the Chinese script which unlike alphabetic or other phonetic scripts relies on multiple signifying principles In recent decades this multiplicity has generated a rich corpus of reflection and experimentation in literature film visual and performance art and design and architecture within both China and different parts of the West Approaching this history from a variety of alternative theoretical perspectives Beyond Sinology reflects on the Chinese script to pinpoint the multiple connections between languages scripts and medial expressions and cultural and national identities Through a complex study of intercultural representations exchanges and tensions the text focuses on the concrete scripting of identity and alterity advancing a new understanding of the links between identity and medium and a critique of articulations that rely on single monolithic and univocal definitions of writing Chinese writing with its history of divergent readings in Chinese and non Chinese contexts with its current reinvention in the age of new media and globalization can teach us how to read and construct mediality and cultural identity in interculturally responsible ways and also how to
