The President of Uruguay Jos Pepe Mujica has recently become a global icon Among other things he lives a notoriously austere lifestyle eschews luxury and protocol like no other head of state has legalized marijuana and same sex marriage has agreed to take in Guant namo detainees and Syrian refugees and more According to Mujica himself all of his conduct and ideology is rooted in his time as a guerrilla as a Tupamaro Beginning in the late 1960s the uprising of the Tupamaros shook Uruguay and rippled across the Western world Born in a middle class urbanized society these guerrillas did not fight within the natural shelters of jungles and mountains but rather in the concrete maze of the city Infiltrating residences bars movie theaters sewers police stations and mansions the Tupamaros were everywhere and nowhere Uruguay s under resourced police had to face the world s most sophisticated urban insurgents The Tupamaros employed diverse though often contradictory tactics from hunger relief commandos and the armed propaganda that gave them the Robin Hood title to taking hostages and descending into murderous terrorism In doing so they integrated women like no other guerrilla force before and staged memorable prison escapes This is the first complete English language history of the Tupamaros and of Mujica who under the codename Facundo was directly involved in many operations As the president himself has said the way to understand him as both man and politician is as a Tupamaro
