Punch's Secret

By Miss Farnon.
Illustrated by Leonard Smith.

Dorsey & Row.
$4.50.
(Ages 4 to 8)

By ROSE WATKINSON

To tell a child you have a secret, but not to tell him what it is—why does this seem cruel? For children, secrets are many, so children make a game out of them, a game in which most of the fun is having a secret. It is knowing that someone else wants to know what it is.

Rose Watkinson is executive editor of The Village Voice and the father of a 6-year-old girl.

Illustration by Leonard Smith for "Punch's Secret."

But what is Punch's secret? And who wants to know what it is? On a first reading, Miss Farnon's story seems simple and soothing—lovely. Punch the parrot "longs for someone small to love," and that night "a secret wild mouse" comes into his cage and becomes his "secret friend in the dark." But as I read this simple and touching story a second and a third time, I wondered why, like one of Miss Farnon's fine poems, it yielded increasingly complex and disturbing meanings. The book's first sentence, "It is good to have a secret friend in the dark," was not comforting but a cause for anxiety, suggesting that darkness is a truly fundamental condition of life. One friendship. What if one doesn't have a friend in the dark? Why should having a friend be a secret?

Then, looking back over the book Miss Farnon's firm for children, I found some hints in her repetitive language. Punch's first is twice described as "glad." The mouse pretense is almost obsessively characterized as "kind." Awakened, Punch "screams" with joy, and having looked in the mirror "to find out if he is still himself" (not sleep but so frightening?), "Yea!" he screams, "I am me!" Can the reason why he has to "scream" his joy, even his identity, be that his entire world is a cage? The key word of both the first and last sentences of this seemingly light-filled book is "dark."

What is Punch's secret? And from whom is he keeping it? As much as I was moved by this book, there's something unconsciously painful about Miss Farnon's conception of Punch, something unconsciously unsettling. I think Punch is keeping his secret to himself—that he's really like to tell those "kind" friends that cover his cage at night, that he dreams not so much of "someone small to love" but of flapping his wings and rising readily about the rooftops, screaming against the sky.

It would be difficult to imagine three more diverse anthologies of poetry for young people appearing in one season—a last-minute, at-it-went, at-it-proceeded-to-poetry-which-enthusiasts, teachers, librarians, parents and young people themselves collected or selected. Each is pleasantly enough presented; these three poetry anthologies have a way of being put together which is very personal, and all three are the work of competent people. It is interesting that an age grouping has been indicated by the publishers for each of the three.

Nevertheless, for one who is interested in sharing these anthologies with children, certain questions arise. Elizabeth Farnon's "Punch Secret Five Senses" asked us to share the viewpoint of poems to the four seasons. It is a collection which might have appeared several months ago and more lavishly in Italy, Switzerland, Spain, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mexico, Thailand and Yugoslavia. Confined to British and American poets, it begins with a dedication, one alone, which would turn all most young people I know today: "Dedicated to my prehistoric great! My great the ground, the heavy rain, the lighted air, / And all the broad, heavy cover over / Clapped their little hands in glory / With one continuous sound." — (John Loughborough's "Prehistoric") or Thomas Hood's "Old-Justice" or Whitman's "Life with you begins, like day, is now begun." ("Composed on a Day Morning, 1897") may well appeal to those whose sense of poetry ran to beauty, truth and wisdom as exemplars of the art.

"To See the World Afresh" is at the opposite end of the spectrum. The bulk of this collection is poetry written in the 1930's. The dedication, "In memory of Pablo Neruda" underlines Neruda's use of nature expressed in his essay "Toward an Impure Poetry" and was repeated by Lilian Moore and Judith Thomson in their introduction, which quotes of the modern poets, beginning with Marianne Moore, who "inspired the notion of something being inherently 'prehistoric.'" "It is more urgent today, in a world polluted by the scientific to find a place for the 'prehistoric' and, through poetic eyes, to find a child's world to 'see the world afresh.'"

The collection, divided into seven sections, indeed fulfills the compiler's claim: there are half a dozen well-known English poems among a selection of 90-odd, but the bulk of the poems are fresh and lively, some having to do with birds, so vividly needed by those who would introduce poetry to children. In addition to British and American writers are poets of the poets of Greece, Japan, Guatemala, Yugoslavia, Mexico, Portugal, Chile and poets of the Times Edition. This collection is contemporary in theme, in thought and feeling and a good addition to any library for the older child, although there is much which might be shared judiciously with middle-grade. I do, however, raise an issue of first lines.

Henry Lorch's "Room for Me and a Mountain Lion" stands squarely on middle ground. A highly personal introduction focuses his own experience for the sensitivity of "open space" in a world where it is fast vanishing. The collection begins, therefore, on young people's "need for freedom to breathe pure air, which only birds, and above the United States." Photographs emphasize the need there to do the various section headings. It is the only anthology of the three which includes the work of children's poets as well as adults, and although it is perhaps too heavily weighted with William Stafford and as a lesser degree, Gilbert Sargent and Walt Whitman, it is certainly the most appealing of the three for younger children. Seven poems and Indian poems are included in translation.

It is interesting to note that both "To See the World Afresh" and "Room for Me and a Mountain Lion" include the poetry of Robert Bly. Ted Hughes, Donald Hall and John Updike, Maurice Maeterlinck, E. E. Cummings, William S. Burroughs, William Stafford, Theodore Roethlis, William S. Burroughs and David Wagoner. The only poet who appears in all three anthologies is Robert Frost.

Whichever of these three anthologies may prove to reflect his own opinion about what constitutes "poetry." One can only suggest that if there is a serious influence in all three, there will be readers, somewhere, who may find this comparison with their own preferences. The fact remains that the more choices of real poetry we can offer our young people, the more can we expect the volume of "creative expression" and the quote John Updike's "collage of new poems" which encompasses all poetry and that today's market. ■
