3 stages approach of Supply Base Management Strategy

- Supply Base Rationalization

It is simply a necessary step in bringing the number to a more manageable level for developing a value-added relationship. The rationalization process should produce substantial savings, as business is concentrated with a few suppliers that offer the best prospects for future integration.

- Supplier Capability Development

Supplier capabilities are developed and refined through performance evaluation, joint improvement projects and performance tracking. Projects may include quality and lean manufacturing initiatives, leadtime reduction and six-sigma process improvements, all aimed at providing better service to the final customer.

- Collaborative Initiatives

A few truly productive relationships are more valuable than many that are faltering. These efforts are complex, timeconsuming and require investment of resources and continual follow-up from both buyer and seller.
