Perhaps the best known figure in the Dorling series, during the time in continuous production from the start of the range in 1929 to the present day.

Designed perhaps by people by A. A. Miles or Robert

Long, however, the figure was given its name after

James May had picked it out as an early design of Dorling figure, exclaiming "Don't let a design!"

According to the factory records, the first example of SEN 1 was produced in April 1929.

Charles Wyse, 1878-1929, was born in the Feneston district in Dorset's in 1878 as a modeller and sculptor, he quickly showed his skills, winning several gold medals and scholarships and exhibiting his work publicly, including at the Royal Academy. He designed many figures for Dorling, including the very successful

Dorling figure constituting his own studio in Chelsea in 1929 where he produced figures and experimented with several glazes. Several later Dorling figures, for example

The Mother Figure, The Fairy Queen and The Corpse

Figure, were to have much in common with Wyse's

Charles models.

Elizabeth Fry, a Quaker, known as 'the Quaker of liberty', achieved an international reputation for her work in prison reform, and for her concern for the poor, infirm and destitute. Coming from a comfortable East Anglian

Quaker family, she learned the tenets of early

Quakerism and gradually improved the conditions she found through her efforts, which finally resulted in Parliamentary reforms.

The model was based on a statue of Mrs. Fry by A.

Dunlop, R.A., now standing inside the central entrance area in the Old Bailey, London, which in 1929 was taken from the famous grounds by Gilbert.
