Psychology And Worship:

Psychology and Worship Roy Stuart Lee, 1956 An introduction to the psychological processes operating in different activities of worship Public Worship John Perham Hylan, 1901 The Psychology of Worship Isidoro Panlasigui, 1960

Public Worship John Hylan, 2014-09-15 The decrease in church attendance the decline of the influence of the church on the masses the growing tendency towards Sabbath desecration the extreme moderation of present day theological conceptions are conditions upon which the present volume endeavors to throw some light by a psychological discussion of the nature and meaning of public worship In an historical retrospect the author finds two typical Sabbaths 1 Recreative held by the Jews until their captivity viz a day of recreation as well as rest 2 Christian or worship conception held by later Jews and by Christians viz a day for worship as well as rest A study of the historical conditions that brought about the transition from the Recreative conception to the Christian reveals the psychological states involved in worship As long as the Jews were prosperous the Recreation view prevailed but after the captivity when misfortunes of all kinds assailed them a transition to the Christian conception was quickly effected Believing in Jehovah they naturally attributed the severity of the conditions of life to His displeasure and accordingly in order to win again His favor they eagerly betook themselves to worship In humility of spirit they throng the temples and with receptive minds receive instruction in spiritual and practical life Thus are open immense possibilities of moral reformation by means of which the race can better adapt itself to its environment this is the great function of the Sabbath of the Christian type In brief while the Recreative Sabbath aims simply to preserve functions already acquired the Christian conception aims at the establishment of new functions p 45 The essential element in producing worship and the consequent moral reformation adaptation is adverse environment In emphasizing this point an interesting parallel is drawn between organic and mental evolution This conclusion the author confirms by his results obtained by the questionnaire method 203 subjects The answers to such questions as State your reasons for going to church personal good 173 duty 140 example 77 Is it the music the sermon prayer or something else that supplies your need in religious worship sermon 52 prayer 41 music 23 fellowship 1 Does church going give you a better idea as to how to live leads to kindness to others 30 singing 26 adoration of God 19 impulse toward a better life 6 show that the great function of religious worship is to secure the moral adjustment of the individual to his environment These results while extremely interesting and valuable would be much more conclusive had they been based on a much larger number of answers than the 203 reported Starbuck s recent religious studies are also cited to show that conversions occur most frequently at the age of greatest physical growth when the individual is face to face with the new environment of maturity to which he has to adjust himself and they thus support the author s general position This analysis of public worship enables us to understand present day conditions By science and invention man has been able to cope so successfully with his environment that the need of religious worship is not urgent and so there is a very general tendency to return to the early Jewish conception of a
