European opportunities EXTRAIT More than 30 years ago the social security systems of OECD states were diagnosed to be in crisis This crisis heralded in the end of the Golden Age of the national welfare state The European OECD states which were also part of the European Community all witnessed rising unemployment in the wake of the oil crises and as a result of economic openness to world markets and rising competition of labor costs Keynesian economic policies of deficit spending became unavailable as an option to revive the economy Not only did external processes of globalization demand adaptations of the welfare states but also internal factors such as the rising age of populations and the change of family patterns questioned whether European welfare states were still capable of delivering for national populations and how classical branches of the welfare state such as unemployment insurance pension systems and healthcare systems should be adapted to meet these new challenges Esping Andersen 1996 Along with this crisis diagnosis of the welfare state in general healthcare systems have become the center of governments attention since the 1980s as spending on health policies has increased while the number people contributing to the social security schemes has decreased due to rising unemployment and slow economic growth Insofar healthcare mirrors the challenges that welfare states face in general

Extending Canadian Health

Insurance R.G. Evans,M.F. Williamson,1978-12-15 This study explores the policy options a provincial government might consider in extending health care coverage to the purchase of prescription drugs and dental care It examines the major public policy objectives involved such as spreading risk redistributing wealth and reducing the barriers to care and evaluates alternative programs in terms of their costs and efficiency as well as their realization of the basic social objectives of health care Using varied statistics some drawn from schemes in other provinces it estimates what different packages of pharmacare and denticare would have cost in Ontario in 1975 The results indicate that universal coverage may be one of the most costly and least effective options Based on current modes of service delivery a universal pharmacare and denticare program would transfer wealth to upper income groups without significantly improving the utilization of health care services A study of drug manufacturing and retailing systems in Canada and of the structure of dental services suggests that wasteful methods of service delivery could lower per capita costs by 30 to 40 per cent Potential annual savings in pharmacy and dentistry together in Ontario run into the hundreds of millions of dollars The authors show how a combination of competitive pressures and selective public intervention can be used to rationalize the delivery system They caution however that such potential savings will be forever unrealized if a public insurance type of program is introduced which freezes the existing system in place and forecloses the options of either public provision or private market competition
