

Integrative approach for optimizing construction and demolition waste management practices in developing countries

ABSTRACT

Due to the numerous infrastructure development projects taking place in developing nations, large amounts of construction and demolition waste (C&DW) are unavoidable. Most C&DW management strategies, however, involve 'isolated' operations with high overhead. Waste data transfers are difficult to watch over. Important information needed for decision-making is, therefore, challenging to obtain. This paper's goal is to discuss C&DW management from an integrative standpoint. Using GIS functions and a fuzzy analytical hierarchy approach, the best sites for waste management facilities can be found. A mixed integer optimization model is created to identify optimal location and allocation of waste management facilities. The objective is to reduce waste collection costs under different operational scenarios. By incorporating 'construct elements' and 'connected elements' that are linked, isolated C&DW management ventures are transformed into successful C&DW management ventures. The effectiveness and efficiency of waste management strategies are evaluated using GIS analysis. A dashboard for tracking waste data flows is created to show how stakeholder decision making can be made easier. The proposed integrative approach differs from other approaches since it re-purposes location-allocation models and GIS data to optimize 'isolated' C&DW management practices. In addition, the notion of 'construct elements' that can be time-shared is outlined. Moreover, the notion of 'connected elements' that are dynamic, time-limited, and yet transient enough to provide the necessary interconnectivity is developed to support and complement the seamless function of a network of C&DW management facilities. The usefulness of the integrative approach is illustrated by a case study. Analysis of case studies demonstrates that waste management strategies in developing countries can be made more effective and waste collection efficiency can be increased. According to comparative studies, updating current waste management facilities can cut operating costs by 36%, while implementing an integrative strategy can cut costs by 52%. The discussions in this paper can help towns reevaluate C&DW management and put useful, unified C&DW management techniques into practice.

1. Introduction and background

Construction projects are significant economic activities that generate substantial amounts of construction and demolition waste (Aslam et al., 2020; Bao & Lu, 2020; Kabirifar et al., 2021). This trend is unavoidable since the amount of waste generated is usually related to the expansion of national economies (Islam et al., 2019; Manowong, 2012; Urio & Brent, 2006; Wang et al., 2022; Yuan, 2013). For example, a quick observation shows that this trend is true especially in quickly developing countries like Qatar, where most of the construction and demolition waste is generated by multiple construction projects running concurrently (Egbelakin et al., 2021). These projects are typically undertaken to address, (i) infrastructure development, (ii) rising urbanization, and (iii) the requirement to satisfy strategic development objectives (Bao & Lu, 2020). Despite this, it is critical to monitor the development, storage, and disposal of construction and demolition waste (C&DW) to prevent the negative repercussions and burdens associated with a reactive approach to C&DW management (Zhao, 2021). While some of the cities in developing countries aspire quick upgrades to smart city developments, it is critical to balance infrastructural development and construction waste management to avoid, for example, visual effects of waste generation and accumulation—a situation that is not amenable to urbanization and smart city development (Bao et al., 2023; Szpilko et al., 2023).

In the published literature, researchers have developed a waste hierarchy to help in positioning waste management strategies towards sustainable waste

Managing Organizations In Developing Countries An Integrative Approach:

Routledge Handbook of Organizational Change in Africa Franca Ovadje, Samuel Aryee, 2018-08-06 Although change management and therefore effective adaptation to environmental complexity is considered a uniquely human cultural activity the extensive change management literature is largely based on the experiences of organizations in the advanced economies of the West As the economies of African countries become increasingly open African organizations will need to be agile in order to adapt and grow in a dynamic global environment Currently there is a dearth of contextualized knowledge on change management within Africa but this handbook aims to address this by bringing together a wide range of experts to explore organizational change and change management from an African context The handbook adopts a multidisciplinary historical philosophical processual and strategic perspective as well as empirical accounts of change management It addresses such issues as What are the external and internal pressures for change What is the content and process of change management What are the essentials of effective change management How can change management be theorized from an African perspective What sort of leadership can best align with change management demands in an African context How do organizations build internal change management capability It is hoped that answers to these questions contained in the handbook will provide a contextualized understanding of change management which African organizations and scholars can leverage to respond to the threats and opportunities inherent in their increasingly dynamic environment The handbook should constitute an essential reference for academics researchers and advanced students of change management development studies and African studies as well as practitioners Managing Organizations for Sustainable Development in Emerging Countries Angappa Gunasekaran, Ana Beatriz Lopes de Souza Jabbour, 2017-10-02 Managing Organizations for Sustainable Development in Emerging Countries focuses on the main challenges and opportunities of managing firms and emerging economies in the light of sustainable development One of the key questions of sustainable development is how organizations from developing countries are achieving their economic goals while considering simultaneously environmental issues like conservation of natural resources eco efficiency biodiversity conservation and climate change mitigation These questions are relevant for government industry and urban sustainability However in the modern literature that discusses organizational management for sustainable development few studies focus on the reality of organizations from emerging countries Moreover changing environmental legislation in emerging countries such as China and Brazil will affect organizational managers In this context this book may contribute to organizational management in the search for more sustainable organizations as well as deal with the challenges of managing organizations in the context of increased social problems degradation of natural resources loss of biodiversity and climate change This book was published as a special issue of the International Journal of Sustainable Development World Ecology Handbook of Flood Risk Management in Developing Countries Victor Oladokun, David Proverbs, Oluseye Adebimpe, Taiwo Adedeji, 2023-03-31 This new handbook brings together various views and experiences of the impacts of flooding and its management in Africa Asia and Latin America by drawing from traditional and modern approaches adopted by communities homeowners academics project managers institutions and policy makers Key stakeholders provide insights and perspectives on flood hazards flood impacts flood control and adaptation strategies across these regions The inclusion of policy makers emergency responders leaders of key organizations and managers of flood defence projects makes this volume a unique addition to the flood management literature The chapters are organized to reveal various impacts and challenges associated with the management of flooding including response and recovery The chapter contributions bring together the different impacts of flooding and propose various mitigation approaches They describe procedures for managing flooding and reducing the impacts from the perspectives of policy makers environmental planners and restorers of flood affected communities Also the book considers some of the related aspects including land use waste management drainage systems security challenges urban planning and development and their contributions to flooding The book s primary target is experienced researchers and practitioners in flood risk management It would also serve as a key text for postgraduate students studying related programmes Inhabitants of flood prone communities in such developing countries will also find the text an important resource for guidance and understanding This multi disciplinary book represents a valuable contribution for a wide range of professionals e g in engineering built environment health retail etc who are interested in flood control and management and or faced with flood related challenges in the course of their work
