managers understanding of the problems of their business and upon their willingness to try and to use new methods of tackling some of them The book starts by describing the different sources of effects on management from the computer It gives the case histories of the experience of five companies in developing different types of computer applications These include the computerization of branch banking production planning and control and the development of a large investment planning model Comparisons are made with the experience of five other companies One chapter discusses the nature of the relations between computer specialists and user managers the reasons for difficulties between them and what can be done to reduce them Another chapter describes what kind of understanding managers need for different types of computer applications The last chapter summarizes the management implications of the study
