Abstract

Since 2015, Greece has been one of the main host countries for many thousands from the Middle East who have been forced to leave their countries for political reasons. In this context, social workers have been at the forefront of responding to refugee and asylum seekers' needs, facing limits to their work due to the neoliberal approach underpinning housing policies. This article discusses social workers' views about the housing policies for refugees and asylum seekers in Greece as part of a policy of power enforcement at the micro and macro
