Managing Socialism From Old Cadres To New Professionals In Revolutionary Cuba:

Managing Socialism Frank T. Fitzgerald, 1990-07-26 Managing Socialism challenges the theoretical underpinnings of Cuban Studies the elite mass perspective It offers a major reinterpretation of the revolutionary process which focuses on the rise and fall of different types of social actors at the intermediate level of Cuban society Frank Fitzgerald identifies intermediate level types the prerevolutionary middle class the old cadres who in the 1960s attained administrative positions with political credentials and the new professionals who primarily since 1970 enter these same occupations on the basis of education Fitzgerald focuses on the transitions from one type to the next and uncovers conflict cooperation patterns between the three strata of Cuban society His study offers new insight into the early exodus from Cuba the problem of scarce skills and Cuba s educational expansion Managing Socialism s previously unexplored subject matter and its challenging theoretical approach make it required reading Focusing on the relationship between social stratification and politics broadly conceived Fitzgerald examines major changes at the intermediate level of Cuban society resulting from and in turn influencing the Cuban revolutionary process Thereby dismissing the elite mass perspective theory Fitzgerald begins his analysis with an examination of factors leading to the scarcity and misallocation of skills in the 1960s Leadership responses to this problem are then analyzed as important links to the crisis of 1970 and the emergence of new professionals The post 1970 rectification process is explored and a study conducted of the decline of the old cadres and rise of the new professionals A chapter is then given to the problem of bureaucratic centralism and typical patterns of conflict and cooperation between social types A discussion of the 1986 rectification campaign and a summary of major findings conclude Fitzgerald s provocative work

Patriots and Traitors in Revolutionary Cuba, 1961-1981 Lillian Guerra, 2023-01-17 Authorities in postrevolutionary Cuba worked to establish a binary society in which citizens were either patriots or traitors This all or nothing approach reflected in the familiar slogan patria o muerte fatherland or death has recently been challenged in protests that have adopted the theme song patria y vida fatherland and life a collaboration by exiles that predictably has been banned in Cuba itself Lillian Guerra excavates the rise of a Soviet advised Communist culture controlled by state institutions and the creation of a multidimensional system of state security whose functions embedded themselves into daily activities and individual consciousness and reinforced these binaries But despite public performance of patriotism the life experience of many Cubans was somewhere in between Guerra explores these in between spaces and looks at Cuban citizens complicity with authoritarianism leaders exploitation of an earnest anti imperialist nationalism and the duality of an existence that contains elements of both support and betrayal of a nation and of an ideology

the cases of Afghanistan and Cambodia Among regimes that survive however prolonged conflicts give rise to a cohesive ruling elite and a powerful and loyal coercive apparatus This leads to the downfall of rival organizations and alternative centers of power such as armies churches monarchies and landowners and helps to inoculate revolutionary regimes against elite defection military coups and mass protest three principal sources of authoritarian breakdown Looking at a range of revolutionary and nonrevolutionary regimes from across the globe Revolution and Dictatorship shows why governments that emerge from violent conflict endure
