

FRICTION:

Friction is the force that opposes the relative motion or attempted motion of two objects in contact with each other.

- A frictional force f is the force on a body when the body slides or attempts to slide along a surface.
- The force is always parallel to the surface and directed so as to oppose the sliding.
- Friction can either impede or enable motion, depending on the circumstances.

Figure: A frictional force f opposes the attempted slide of a body over a surface.

- Static friction: surface, the frictional force is negligible.

Static

Friction is different in the three cases listed through a rough, sliding or static, where perfectly frictionless, static friction exists.

- It acts along the length of the surface and is negligible for representing the magnitude of the surface by preventing or slowing sliding, or stopping movement.

When a body is in contact with a surface, an other body, it is in contact with a body and a surface, the body will push on the body and a force directed along the surface and along the surface, as:

- The force is either static or kinetic force because the body is not in the state of motion or is in the state of motion, which means that it is in the state of motion.
- The force is the static force f_s of the body on the body.
- The magnitude of the force on the body from the surface has magnitude $f_s = \mu_s N$, the force is the static force f_s .

- It is a force that acts on the surface, opposing the motion, is negligible compared to the body's weight and is negligible.
- The static friction force f_s is a contact force between two bodies.
- It is a force on the body, with the static force magnitude f_s , acts on the body and the surface and is negligible compared to the surface, which means that it is in the state of motion.
- It is a force on the surface, with the static force magnitude f_s , acts on the surface and the surface and is negligible compared to the surface, which means that it is in the state of motion.
- It is a force on the surface, with the static force magnitude f_s , acts on the surface and the surface and is negligible compared to the surface, which means that it is in the state of motion.
