

This anatomical diagram illustrates a shoulder joint with a dislocated humerus. The humerus is displaced forward from its normal position. The labrum, a ring of cartilage that normally fits into the bony rim of the glenoid cavity, is shown detached from the rim. The joint capsule is visible as a pinkish-red layer surrounding the joint. The humeral head shows a lesion, specifically a notching, where it has impacted the glenoid rim. The diagram uses various colors to distinguish between bone (tan), cartilage (blue), ligaments (green), and soft tissue (pink/red).
