

Social Justice and Multicultural Issues: Implications for the Practice and Training of Counselors and Counseling Psychologists

Madonna G. Constantine, Sally M. Hage, Mai M. Kindaichi, and Rhonda M. Bryant

The authors discuss the historical and contemporary connection to social justice issues in the fields of counseling and counseling psychology via the multicultural counseling movement. In addition, the authors present ways in which social justice issues can be addressed in counselors' and counseling psychologists' work with clients from diverse cultural backgrounds and in graduate training programs.

For many decades, counselors and counseling psychologists have been concerned with the relationship between individuals' mental health and the social milieus in which people live. As the racial and ethnic diversity of the United States continues to increase, the need for mental health professionals to tailor their mental health services to the needs of various cultural populations has become more germane (Constantine, Kindaichi, Arora, Donnelly, & Jung, 2002). In particular, the growing recognition of the negative consequences of oppression in the lives of people of color has been crucial in helping many counselors and counseling psychologists to identify effective interventions to address such issues and to work more broadly to effect social change (Hage, 2003; Vera & Speight, 2003). Such awareness and actions have paralleled the emergence of the multicultural competence movement (Arredondo & Perez, 2003; Sue et al., 1982).

Multicultural competence generally is defined as the extent to which counselors possess appropriate levels of self-awareness, knowledge, and skills in working with individuals from diverse cultural backgrounds (Arredondo et al., 1996; Sue, Arredondo, & McDavis, 1992). In particular, self-awareness entails being cognizant of one's attitudes, beliefs, and values regarding race, ethnicity, and culture, along with one's awareness of the sociopolitical relevance of cultural group membership in terms of issues of cultural privilege, discrimination, and oppression. The knowledge dimension of multicultural competence refers to information one has about various worldview orientations, histories of oppression endured by marginalized populations, and culture-specific values that influence the subjective and collective experiences of marginalized populations. The skills component of multicultural competence involves the ability to draw from an existing fund of cultural knowledge to design mental health interventions that are relevant to marginalized populations. In many respects, multicultural competence has become inextricably linked to counselors' and counseling psychologists' ability to commit to and actualize an agenda of social justice (Kiselica & Robinson, 2001).

Social justice reflects a fundamental valuing of fairness and equity in resources, rights, and treatment for marginalized individuals and groups of people who do not share equal power in society because of their immigration, racial, ethnic, age, socioeconomic, religious heritage, physical ability, or sexual orientation status groups (Fondacaro & Weinberg, 2002; Prilleltensky & Nelson, 1997). In order to address social justice issues, some counselors and counseling psychologists in the United States have adopted a professional commitment to ensuring global or international social change (Osborne et al., 1998). Others have been involved primarily at a domestic level by being concerned with helping members of U.S. society to deal with the personal, societal, and institutional barriers that impede their academic, personal, social, or career development. Both of these levels of involvement in social justice issues, however, are critical in understanding the interdependence of macrosystems and microsystems in people's lives, especially in the lives of marginalized populations.

In this article, we discuss the historical and contemporary connection to social justice issues in the fields of counseling and counseling psychology vis-à-vis the multicultural counseling movement. In addition, we underscore ways that social justice issues can be incorporated into counselors' and counseling psychologists' work with culturally diverse clients and into the curricula of academic training programs.

School Social Workers in the Multicultural Environment Paul R

Keys, 2014-02-04 School Social Workers in the Multicultural Environment is a new approach for creating diversity in classroom and field curricula. The contributing authors offer practical advice for the effective teaching of multicultural content which is now a requirement in the Curriculum Standards of the Council on Social Work Education. The authors address existing fears some readers may have regarding the teaching of multicultural content in social work and provide educators and field instructors with a model for overcoming these fears and for creating classroom excellence. Multicultural Education offers educators a chance to explore how to implement the required material effectively. While offering guidance to educators, School Social Workers in the Multicultural Environment focuses on fundamental and controversial approaches to multicultural social work education by answering these questions: Do educators know how to teach multicultural social work content? Where should multicultural content be taught? Should schools offer courses or workshops to facilitate faculty development? How should schools monitor multicultural outcomes? In what way should content be evaluated: peer evaluation, formal teaching observations, or other methods? School Social Workers in the Multicultural Environment, written by experienced educators, field instructors, and practitioners, provides advice on the teaching of multicultural social work content in both urban and rural areas and among many different populations. The book examines in depth the unspoken myths and fears encountered in teaching multiculturalism to students and helps educators and curriculum planners avoid common unfortunate mistakes often made in multicultural classrooms and field instruction. Topics discussed include: Student Learning Processes for Multicultural Content; Classroom Tested Teaching Strategies for Cultural Competence in Practice Classes; A Model for Measuring Multicultural Outcomes; Perceived Racism and Minority Student Retention Differing Student and Educator Perceptions in Field Instruction; Field Instruction Strategies for Successfully Teaching Cultural Ethnic Gender Class and Age Characteristics; Rural Diversity Education Strategies; American Indian Social Work Student Issues; Human services educators and curriculum planners who must effectively teach and implement multiculturalism in their programs will find School Social Workers in the Multicultural Environment leads the way in creating classroom excellence. It stresses the importance of creating a new model for teaching and practice for students and educators.

Social Work in the 21st Century

Michael Reisch, Eileen Gambrill, 1997-02-05 I am enthusiastic about this publication; it is an excellent manuscript well conceived, well written, and the contributors all appear to be very well qualified. Philip Popple, Western Michigan University. This book will be helpful to you in teaching policy practice or introductory social work courses at the BSW or MSW level if you want to generate stimulating discussion and debate among your students on how social work's roles are changing now and may change further in the future. Expose your students to the thoughts and opinions of many of today's leaders in social work education in essays specially written for this volume.
