series of papers collected in this volume may be considered as a compliment or commentary to my Essay on Classification since I have endeavored to present here in a more popular form the views first expressed in that work And although the direct intention of these pages has been as their title indicates to give some general hints to young students as to the methods by which scientific truth has been reached including a general sketch of the history of science in past times yet I have also wished to avail myself of this opportunity to enter my earnest protest against the transmutation theory revived of late with so much ability and so generally received It is my belief that naturalists are chasing a phantom in their search after some material gradation among created beings by which the whole animal Kingdom may have been derived by successive development from a single germ or from a few germs the resources of the Deity cannot be so meager that in order to create a human being endowed with reason he must change a monkey into a man
