

The image shows a rectangular tea box with a black and gold horizontal striped pattern. A central, ornate label with a scalloped border is affixed to the front. The label is white with black text and decorative flourishes. A small window in the label reveals several tea bags inside the box; one bag prominently displays the Union Jack flag. The background of the label features a faint, artistic illustration of the Eiffel Tower and Parisian architecture.

that has happened any time as it brought the public sphere into the home and women into the public sphere Taking this claim as its starting point Sound Citizens examines how a cohort of professional women broadcasters activists and politicians used radio to contribute to the public sphere and improve women s status in Australia from the introduction of radio in 1923 until the introduction of television in 1956 This book reveals a much broader and more complex history of women s contributions to Australian broadcasting than has been previously acknowledged Using a rich archive of radio magazines station archives scripts personal papers and surviving recordings Sound Citizens traces how women broadcasters used radio as a tool for their advocacy radio s significance to the history of women s advancement and how broadcasting was used in the development of women s citizenship in Australia It argues that women broadcasters saw radio as a medium that had the potential to transform women s lives and status in society and that they worked to both claim their own voices in the public sphere and to encourage other women to become active citizens Radio provided a platform for women to contribute to public discourse and normalised the presence of women s voices in the public sphere both literally and figuratively
