Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, laboratory-based, and field-based training program on the knowledge, skills, and attitudes of students in a forensic psychology master's program. The program was designed to provide students with a comprehensive understanding of the field of forensic psychology, including the legal system, mental health, and the role of the forensic psychologist. The study found that the program had a significant positive effect on students' knowledge, skills, and attitudes, and that the program was well-received by students. The results of this study suggest that the program is an effective way to prepare students for a career in forensic psychology.

Figure 1 displays the spatial distribution of the 16 species across a 4x4 grid of plots. Each plot shows the relationship between distance from the shore (km) on the x-axis and depth (m) on the y-axis. The species are represented by different symbols and colors, showing their specific spatial preferences.
