Revolution In Military Affairs:

The Revolution in Military Affairs Elinor Camille Sloan, Université du Québec à Montréal. Centre d'études des politiques étrangères et de sécurité, Raoul-Dandurand Chair of Strategic and Diplomatic Studies, 2002 The campaign in Afghanistan the Gulf war and Kosovo show how advances in information technology are driving a high tech revolution in military affairs RMA This text outlines elements of the RMA and examines efforts of the US and NATO

Another View of the Revolution in Military Affairs Jeffrey R. Cooper, 1994-07-15 In April 1994 the Army War College and the Strategic Studies Institute hosted the Fifth Annual Strategy Conference The theme of this year's conference was The Revolution in Military Affairs RMA Defining an Army for the 21st Century Jeffrey R Cooper presented the following paper as part of an opening panel which sought to define the RMA Mr Cooper urges defense planners to determine what strategic as opposed to operational benefits might be derived from the RMA He contends that making the internal reforms that will be required will be as challenging as coming to terms with the operational and strategic implications of the new technologies The first requirement is to understand the parameters and dynamics of this particular revolution in military affairs Mr Cooper puts the RMA in historical perspective by discussing the relationships among technology socioeconomic and political change and their implications for warfare during the Napoleonic era the mid 19th century and World Wars I and II He argues that in the past dramatic technological change affected warfare in different ways Mr Cooper warns that by using the RMA to define a technical legacy we make three errors First such an approach could lead to a fruitless search for a silver bullet technology on which to build the RMA Second the focus on technology could shift attention away from the critical issues of purpose strategy doctrine operational innovation and organizational adaptation Finally committing the first two errors will compound the problem by wasting very scarce defense resources on new programs and projects which may have little or nothing to do with the strategic situation Military professionals and defense planners alike need to remind themselves that while technology can provide new capabilities the strategic equation is not necessarily driven by technological innovation

Another View of the Revolution in Military Affairs Jeffrey R. Cooper, 1994 In April 1994 the Army War College and the Strategic Studies Institute hosted the Fifth Annual Strategy Conference The theme of this year's conference was The Revolution in Military Affairs RMA Defining an Army for the 21st Century Jeffrey R Cooper presented the following paper as part of an opening panel which sought to define the RMA He urges defense planners to determine what strategic as opposed to operational benefits might be derived from the RMA He contends that making the internal reforms that will be required will be as challenging as coming to terms with the operational and strategic implications of the new technologies The first requirement is to understand the parameters and dynamics of this particular revolution in military affairs Mr Cooper puts the RMA in historical perspective by discussing the relationships among technology socioeconomic and political change and their implications for warfare during the Napoleonic era the mid 19th century and World Wars I and II He argues that in the past dramatic technological change

affected warfare in different ways Mr Cooper warns that by using the RMA to define a technical legacy we make three errors First such an approach could lead to a fruitless search for a silver bullet technology on which to build the RMA Second the focus on technology could shift attention away from the critical issues of purpose strategy doctrine operational innovation and organizational adaptation Finally committing the first two errors will compound the problem by wasting very scarce defense resources on new programs and projects which may have little or nothing to do with the strategic situation Military professionals and defense planners alike need to remind themselves that while technology can provide new capabilities the strategic equation is not necessarily driven by technological innovation

Strategy and the Revolution in Military Affairs: from Theory to Policy Steven Metz, James Kievit, 2013-01-28 American combat effectiveness in the Gulf War suggested that a historic revolution in military affairs RMA is underway possibly solving many of the strategic dilemmas the United States faces in the post Cold War world Inspired by this notion a small group of RMA analysts has emerged So far they have concentrated on defining and describing military revolutions Now broader theoretical and policy issues must be addressed The notion of military revolutions grew from Soviet writing of the 1970s and 1980s Early studies talked of a military technical revolution MTR but this quickly evolved into the more holistic concept of revolutions in military affairs Most analysts define a RMA as a discontinuous increase in military capability and effectiveness arising from simultaneous and mutually supportive change in technology systems operational methods and military organizations The current RMA is characterized by four types of changes extremely precise stand off strikes dramatically improved command control and intelligence information warfare and nonlethality Analysts see a number of benefits from harnessing the current revolution in military affairs and using it to build 21st century U S armed forces rejuvenating the political utility of military power delaying the emergence of a peer competitor providing a blueprint for technology acquisition and force reorganization and inspiring conceptual forward looking thinking

Toward a Revolution in Military Affairs? Thierry Gongora, Harald von Riekhoff, 2000-05-30 The Revolution in Military Affairs RMA unleashed by the integration of information technologies into weapons systems military units and operations is a phenomenon whose impacts have been felt well beyond the Gulf in 1991 or the Balkans in 1999 Technological developments lie at the center of these changes however the RMA is about more than technology It includes the consequences of technological changes for defense and security This study provides an assessment of the RMA that goes beyond a mere description of new defense related technologies to deal with deeper more fundamental issues Through the contributions of American Canadian Chinese and French experts this book surveys the RMA from various perspectives and evaluates it from the standpoints of military history and military science The authors conclude that while the RMA represents a significant challenge for defense establishments it may fall short of being truly revolutionary Whether one looks at power projection or information warfare it appears that emerging technologies will translate into significant improvements in capabilities but not necessarily a revolution in warfare From a comparative perspective the United States remains well ahead in thinking of and implementing changes that stem from the RMA although other nations may make selective use of the RMA to promote regional security goals Another View of the Revolution in Military Affairs Jeffrey R. Cooper, 2012-12-09 In April 1994 the Army War College and the Strategic Studies Institute hosted the Fifth Annual Strategy Conference The theme of this year's conference was The Revolution in Military Affairs RMA Defining an Army for the 21st Century Jeffrey R. Cooper presented the following paper as part of an opening panel which sought to define the RMA Mr Cooper urges defense planners to determine what strategic as opposed to operational benefits might be derived from the RMA He contends that making the internal reforms that will be required will be as challenging as coming to terms with the operational and strategic implications of the new technologies The first requirement is to understand the parameters and dynamics of this particular revolution in military affairs Mr Cooper puts the RMA in historical perspective by discussing the relationships among technology socioeconomic and political change and their implications for warfare during the Napoleonic era the mid 19th century and World Wars I and II He argues that in the past dramatic technological change affected warfare in different ways

The Revolution in Military Affairs Robbin F. Laird, Holger H. Mey, 1999 The revolution in military affairs RMA is an American concept that frames a debate about the restructuring of American military forces in the period of globalization of the American economy A core task for U S allies is to seek to understand the American debate the American approach to the RMA a baseline the RMA Europe France reflections on the U S European military technology gap The Dynamics of Military Revolution, 1300-2050 MacGregor Knox, Williamson Murray, 2001-08-27 The Dynamics of Military Revolution aims to bridge a major gap in the emerging literature on revolutions in military affairs suggesting that there have been two very different phenomena at work over the past centuries military revolutions which are driven by vast social and political changes and revolutions in military affairs which military institutions have directed although usually with great difficulty and ambiguous results By providing both a conceptual framework and a historical context for thinking about revolutionary changes in military affairs the work establishes a baseline for understanding the patterns of change innovation and adaptation that have marked war in the Western World since the thirteenth century beginning with Edward III's revolutionary changes in medieval warfare through the development of modern Western military institutions in seventeenth century France to the cataclysmic changes of the First World War and the German Blitzkrieg victories of 1940 This history provides a guide for thinking about military revolutions in the coming century which are as inevitable as they are difficult to predict The American Revolution in Military Affairs Colin S. Gray, 1997 The Revolution in Military Affairs Earl H. Tilford (Jr.), 1995-06-23 The current Revolution in Military Affairs RMA is taking place against the background of a larger historical watershed involving the end of the Cold War and the advent of what Alvin and Heidi Toffler have termed the Information Age In this essay Dr Earl Tilford argues that RMAs are driven by more than breakthrough technologies and that while the technological component is important a true revolution in the way military institutions organize equip and train for war and in the way war is itself conducted depends on the confluence of political social and technological factors After an overview of the dynamics of the RMA Dr Tilford makes the case that interservice rivalry and a reintroduction of the managerial ethos this time under the guise of total quality management TQM may be the consequences of this revolution In the final analysis warfare is quintessentially a human endeavor Technology and technologically sophisticated weapons are only means to an end The U S Army along with the other services is embracing the RMA as it downsizes and restructures itself into Force XXI Warfare even on the digitized battlefield is likely to remain unpredictable bloody and horrific Military professionals cannot afford to be anything other than well prepared for whatever challenges lie ahead be it war with an Information Age peer competitor a force of guerrillas out of the Agrarian Age or a band of terrorists using the latest in high tech weaponry While Dr Tilford is optimistic about the prospects for Force XXI what follows is not an unqualified endorsement of the RMA or of the Army s transition to an Information Age force By examining issues and problems that were attendant to previous RMAs Dr Tilford raises questions that ought to be asked by the Army as it moves toward Force XXI Warfare is the author reminds us the most complex of human undertakings and the victors even in the Information Age will be those who as in the past are masters of the art as well as the science of war
