

HOW RED WINE IS MADE

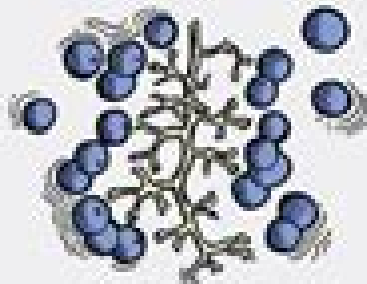

The easy guide to the wine-making process
in 12 simple steps for beginners

Harvest grapes

The vintage (harvest) period is the best time to pick the grapes. It's during this time that the grapes are at their peak. The weather is usually warm and dry, which is ideal for the grapes to ripen.

Prepare grapes

Before the grapes can be used, they need to be prepared. This involves removing the stems and leaves, and then washing the grapes thoroughly. The grapes are then dried to remove any excess moisture.

Clarification

Clarification is the process of removing any unwanted particles from the wine. This is done by adding a small amount of a clarifying agent, such as egg whites, to the wine. The mixture is then stirred and allowed to settle, which causes the unwanted particles to clump together and sink to the bottom.

Press

After the fermentation process, the wine is pressed. This is done by using a press to squeeze the grapes, which releases the juice. The juice is then collected in a container.

Fermentation

The juice is then placed in a fermentation vessel, such as a barrel or a tank. The mixture is allowed to ferment for a period of time, which allows the yeast to convert the sugars in the juice into alcohol. The fermentation process is monitored closely to ensure that the wine is developing as expected.

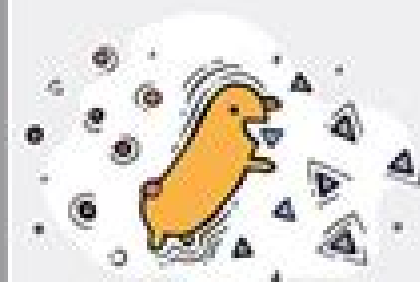

Add yeast

Before the fermentation process, yeast is added to the juice. This is done by adding a small amount of yeast to the juice, which allows the yeast to convert the sugars in the juice into alcohol. The yeast is added at a temperature of 15-20°C (60-68°F) to ensure that it is active.

Bottling

Bottling is the final step in the wine-making process. The wine is poured into bottles, which are then sealed with a cork. The bottles are then stored in a cool, dark place for a period of time, which allows the wine to mature.

Malolactic

Malolactic fermentation is a process that occurs in some wines. It is the conversion of malic acid into lactic acid, which gives the wine a softer, more rounded flavor. This process is often used to create a 'buttery' or 'creamy' texture in the wine.

Aging

The wine is then aged in a barrel or a tank. This allows the wine to develop a more complex flavor and a smoother texture. The aging process is monitored closely to ensure that the wine is developing as expected.

Blending

The wine is then blended with other wines to create a final product. This is done by combining different wines, which allows the winemaker to create a wine with a specific flavor profile. The blending process is monitored closely to ensure that the wine is developing as expected.

Bottle aging

The wine is then stored in a cool, dark place for a period of time, which allows the wine to mature. This is the final step in the wine-making process, and it is essential for creating a high-quality wine.
