

The two aspects of human nature that great poets catch hold of are those that are common, but often neglected, things: an unheroic life, but a humanity beneath the hero's helmet; a great, vast dream, but a humanity beneath the hero's armor. The poet's task is to show the human side of the hero, and the hero's side of the human. The poet's task is to show the human side of the hero, and the hero's side of the human. The poet's task is to show the human side of the hero, and the hero's side of the human.
