Handbook of Research on Equity in Computer Science in P-16 Education Keengwe, Jared, Tran, Yune, 2020-11-13 The growing trend for high quality computer science in school curricula has drawn recent attention in classrooms. With an increasingly information based and global society, computer science education coupled with computational thinking has become an integral part of an experience for all students given that these foundational concepts and skills intersect cross disciplinarily with a set of mental competencies that are relevant in their daily lives and work. While many agree that these concepts should be taught in schools, there are systematic inequities that exist to prevent students from accessing related computer science skills. The Handbook of Research on Equity in Computer Science in P 16 Education is a comprehensive reference book that highlights relevant issues, perspectives, and challenges in P 16 environments that relate to the inequities that students face in accessing computer science or computational thinking and examines methods for challenging these inequities in hopes of allowing all students equal opportunities for learning these skills. Additionally, it explores the challenges and policies that are created to limit access and thus reinforce systems of power and privilege. The chapters highlight issues, perspectives, and challenges faced in P 16 environments that include gender and racial imbalances, population of growing computer science teachers who are predominantly white and male, teacher preparation or lack of faculty expertise, professional development programs, and more. It is intended for teacher educators, K 12 teachers, high school counselors, college faculty in the computer science department, school administrators, curriculum and instructional designers, directors of teaching and learning centers, policymakers, researchers, and students.

Mentoring Revisited: Making an Impact on Individuals and Institutions Marie A.

Wunsch, 1994-07-02 If we believe that the welfare of individuals and the organization are one and the same, the points of compatibility and mutual support must be found and nurtured. If we value the developmental culture of an academic institution, the concerns of individuals for growth, change, advancement, recognition, and support can be brought into harmony with the goals of the organizational culture for stability, continuity, and community. The twenty first century will bring new challenges to higher education. Academic institutions must renew their responsibility to support the developmental needs of all their members. This commitment to support human growth is also part of institutional regeneration. An integrated, comprehensive model of personal and organizational development that includes mentoring for students, faculty, staff, and administrators can make a significant contribution to the best use of human resources, community building, and institutional vitality. This is the 57th issue of the quarterly journal New Directions for Teaching and Learning. For more information on the series, please see the Journals and Periodicals page.

Modern Mentor Jason C. Hopper, 2018-08-16 Successful people are always talking about the role their mentors played in their lives. What they don't tell you is how hard they had to work to mine that mentorship gold. When it comes to finding an amazing mentor, you have two choices: 1) you can wait for a fairy godmother like mentor to see your potential and pull you out of your current situation, or 2) you can learn how to be an amazing protégé and get the most out of the mentors around you. You are closer to success than you think, and there are mentors who really want to help you get there. The catch is they have no idea how to mentor you. But don't worry, you can make those mentorships work by jumping in the driver's seat and owning the role of a protégé by learning how to learn setting strategic goals developing a plan watching for gaps in the process asking better questions and measuring your progress Modern Mentor How to find a mentor and make it work walks through a prescriptive process for identifying quality mentors and establishing strong mentoring relationships from the role of a protégé By first recognizing the different stages of learning described as acquiring knowledge developing skill and then demonstrating ability the first section Learning how to Learn will recalibrate the way readers think about learning new things Section two Making a Mentor reviews the different types of advisors available consultants coaches mentors and trainers how these advisors stack up against different learning needs and how to get the ball rolling with a new mentor The final and largest section Becoming a Better Protégé walks readers through established processes tips and routines that increase the quality and output of any mentoring relationship Included as a free resource are several downloadable worksheets and exercises that directly align with the Becoming a Better Protégé model Email 559 jhopper gmail com for worksheet copies
