Peggy A. Kong,2015-10-30 Like many countries around the world China has been implementing policies aimed at improving parent school relationships However unlike many developed countries the historical context of family school relationships has been limited and parents typically do not participate in the school context Until now there has been little research conducted in rural China on parental involvement in their children s education This book investigates the nature of parental involvement in primary children s education in rural China by using a combination of quantitative and qualitative methods It outlines the layered strategies of how rural parents are involved in their children s schooling showing that rural parents strongly desire educational success for their children and view education as a means to their children gaining social mobility It demonstrates that few rural parents engage in visible forms of parental involvement in their children s schools such as attending parent teacher meetings Rather they are more likely to engage strategies to support their children s education which are largely invisible to schools It adds to the growing body of parental involvement research that suggests that culture location and socio economic status influence different forms of parental involvement and highlights nuances in invisible forms of parental involvement Providing insights into how poor rural parents envision their role with their children schools and the larger society and how these relationships can affect the social mobility of students and families this book will be of huge interest to students and scholars of Asian education comparative and international education and Chinese society Papers Relating to the Foreign Relations of the United States United States. attractions Central to the book's argument is that the stage representations of China were inherently intercultural and open to new influences manifested by the evolving combinations of Chinese and English/British traits Through the dramatization of the Chinese Other the representations questioned satirized and put in sharp relief the ontological and epistemological bases of the English/British Self
