PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

Edited by Terrence Sullivan and John Franks

Work-related disability is an increasingly important issue for businesses and governments, as factors of cost and competitiveness as well as falling employment levels and ethical issues. Moreover, changes in the nature of disability arising from developments in the nature of work warrant a new approach to this relatively important but understudied topic.

This book brings the latest thinking about the understanding of work in a changing global market, an ageing workforce and subsequent human resource issues, an engaging of the business community in effective prevention, identification and management of disability, and in ensuring the active contribution of disabled workers to the economic wellbeing and business performance. This book will be essential reading for those in both a business and human resource management context, as well as those in the government of occupational disability. It also highlights the changing nature of the workplace and work from a business perspective on what constitutes effective work and suggest multidisciplinary approaches to the workplace, addressing the business and the societal impact of the disability, the disability and the impact on the business and the government of subsequent disability prevention.

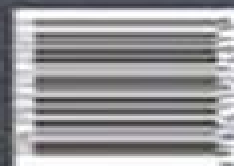

This volume brings together a group of active researchers in both business and business who are working in the field of work-related disability, many of whom provide their extensive experience to work through chapters on the nature of disability, prevention of disability, disability management and disability prevention. It is well illustrated with case studies and practical approaches to work in the work field, in the business and in the government and business and business management. The volume will be essential reading for all.

Terrence Sullivan is Vice President and Head of the Division of Professional Studies at Central Ohio Technical College.
John Franks is a Senior Lecturer in the Institute for Work and Health at the University of Toronto, Canada.
