How Canadians Communicate V David Taras, Christopher Waddell, 2016-03-15 Fewer Canadians than ever are lacing up skates swimming lengths at the pool practicing their curve ball and experiencing the thrill of competition However despite a decline in active participation Canadians spend enormous amounts of time and money on sports as fans and followers of sporting events and sports culture Never has media coverage of sports been more exhaustive and never has it been more driven by commercial interests and the need to fuel consumerism on which corporate profits depend But the power plays now occurring in the arena of sports are by no means solely a matter of money At issue as well in the media capture of sports are the values that inform our daily lives the physical and emotional health of the population and the symbols so long central to a sense of Canadian identity Writing from a variety of perspectives the contributors to this collection set out to explore the impact of the media on our reception of and attitudes toward sports to unpack the meanings that sports have for us as citizens and consumers Some contributors probe the function of sports as spectacle the escalation of violence controversies over drug use and the media's coverage of tragic deaths while others shed light on the way in which the media serve to transform sports into a vehicle for the expression of identity and nationalism The goal is not to score points but to prompt critical discussion of why sports matter in Canadian life and culture and how they contribute to the construction of identity based in Hamilton Alabama whose family has been making pottery in the South since the 1830s Traditionally southern potters made utilitarian objects necessary for rural life As a boy Brown and his brother learned the family s timeworn methods and techniques helping their father in his shop including tending the mule that drove the mill that mixed clay Business suffered as demand for stoneware churns jugs and chamber pots waned in the postwar years and manufacture ceased following the deaths of Brown s father and brother in the mid 1960s Brown turned to logging for his livelihood his skill with mules proving useful in working difficult and otherwise inaccessible terrain In the early 1980s he returned to the family trade and opened a new shop that relied on the same methods of production with which he had grown up including a mule powered mill for mixing clay and the use of a wood fired rather than gas fueled kiln He stayed in logging for a few more years but pottery soon became Brown s main occupation Folklorist Joey Brackner met Brown in 1983 while researching traditional Alabama pottery for the Montgomery Museum of Fine Arts and the Alabama State Council for the Arts The two quickly became close friends and collaborated together on a variety of documentary and educational projects in succeeding years efforts which led to greater exposure commercial success and Brown s recognition as a National Heritage Fellow by the National Endowment for the Arts in 1992 These developments were part of a larger overall trend as the utilitarian origins of traditional craft practices evolved into more explicitly creative and cultural forms of practice Arts and crafts fairs cropped up around the country and Brown adapted accordingly specializing in collectible crowd pleasers like face jugs and eventually launching the Jerry Brown Arts Festival which takes place in Hamilton every spring For years Brown spoke of the urge to write a book but never set pen to paper In 2015 Brackner took the bull by the horns interviewing Brown and recording his life story over the course of a weekend Although Brown died suddenly the following year Jerry Brown Pottery remains in operation managed by Brown s wife stepson and his family Of Mules and Mud is the story of Jerry Brown s life in his words as recounted in those recorded sessions lightly edited and elaborated and illustrated with photos from all phases of Brown s life
