

AV-8B HARRIER II PLUS

• Latest Harrier variant • Air-to-air capability • Export orders

Internationally recognized as one of the most potent and versatile weapons in service, the original second-generation Harrier II was generated by its lack of radar. In the UK, British Aerospace (BAe) had produced the Sea Harrier by adding radar to the basic Harrier, a trend that has been repeated with the Harrier II Plus. With the JFQ-65 radar from the F/A-18A Hornet, the Harrier II Plus has gained a formidable beyond-visual-range (BVR) capability.

Currently almost indistinguishable from the standard AV-8B, the Harrier II Plus embodies many improvements, including a new radar, new weapons and an upgraded engine.

Unpainted and showing the various different structural materials, the first rebuild Harrier II Plus performs a fly-by.

'Flying Tigers'
The first unit of the US Marine Corps to receive the Harrier II Plus was VMFA-542, which has deployed to the Gulf in 1991. One of its aircraft is seen here displaying its 52 Stripes Scheme during a training sortie.

4 Variations in colour
Different paint schemes can be seen on the Harrier II Plus. Most sport two-tone (Olive/Gray), though these two examples have much darker upper surfaces.

Reduction in orders
Originally it was hoped that the entire USMC fleet would be upgraded to Harrier II Plus standard, but defence cutbacks during the 1990s have reduced the total to 55 aircraft.

FACTS AND FIGURES

- Since the first Harrier II Plus took to the air in 1986, engine failure has resulted in one of the programme's weaknesses.
- A primary motivation for the programme was experience from the Gulf War.
- It is hoped that all of the improved AV-8Bs will be delivered by 2005.
- All the Harrier II Plus variants are to receive entirely new weapons. This is expected to be completed by the end of 1999.
- The introduction of the new aircraft has resulted in a true multi-role Harrier.
- Italy has been the first country to acquire Harriers before single-seat variants.
