

Nutrition & Oral Health

Diet & Tooth Decay

- Dietary imbalance increases the risk of developing chronic diseases such as obesity, heart disease, type 2 diabetes, as well as the risk of developing tooth decay
- Added sugar in the diet is one of the main causes of tooth decay
- Tooth decay refers to the destruction of tooth enamel (the harder outer layer) and dentine (the softer inner layer). It happens when a sticky film of bacteria, called "plaque", forms on the teeth and gums
- When you consume food and beverages containing sugar, the bacteria in plaque produce acids that attack the tooth surface. The build-up of plaque and acid from bacteria causes enamel or dentine to break down, resulting in the formation of a cavity (hole) in the tooth

Sources of added sugar in diet:

1. Naturally occurring sugar: fruit juices, fruit smoothies, sugar cane drinks

2. Sugar added by consumers: sugar or honey added into beverages or in cooking
3. Sugar added by manufacturers: soft drinks, breakfast cereals, 3-in-1 drinks, ice-cream, cakes, biscuits

Tips to reduce tooth decay:

- Reduce the amount and frequency of consumption of food and drinks containing sugar
- If taken, sugary food and drinks should only be consumed at mealtimes, rather than in between meals. Saliva is produced when we chew and protects the teeth against decay
- Avoid sugar-containing food and drinks near bedtime. There is a drop in salivary flow at night and with reduced swallowing activity, sugar remains in the mouth longer
- Plain milk or plain water between meals are better options than sugary drinks
- It is a good practice to rinse your mouth after eating and drinking

Nutrition In Oral Health Disease:

NUTRITION AND ORAL HEALTH Dr Abhishek Jairaj, Dr R Padmini Rani ,Dr. Gopinath Vivekanandan, 2021-05-27

Nutrition is an important modifiable parameter which can have a major impact on oral health. Poor nutritional status can adversely affect oral health and poor oral health can influence dietary intake and subsequently lead to malnutrition and oral health can play a crucial role in maintaining good nutrition. Interdisciplinary teams of general practitioners, dentist nurses and dieticians working together can help assure that patients maintain good oral health status and adequate nutrition are maintained. To maintain health the human body needs daily nourishment in the form of carbohydrates, proteins and minerals.

The associations between oral health conditions, dietary practices and nutritional status and general health status are complex with many interrelating factors. Inadequate nutrition can affect the oral health including dental caries, periodontal diseases, diseases of oral mucosa and infectious diseases. Compromised oral health can alter food choices and negatively impact food intake leading to suboptimal nutritional status which can lead to chronic systemic diseases. Recognizing and treating oral health and nutrition problems are important in improving the health and quality of life. This book provides an overview about the relationship between oral health and nutrition. Nutrition and oral health: Public health relevance
