

Domestic Price Policies in the Context of Trade Liberalisation

V. Ratna Reddy and P. Pradhyakar Reddy*

1

INTRODUCTION

The literature on trade liberalisation and agricultural performance is marked with controversies, as the arguments are equally divided in favour as well as against agricultural growth.¹ Theoretically, trade liberalisation and domestic market deregulation would lead to efficient allocation of resources. Given the comparative advantage argument each nation benefits from trade (Edwards, 1993; Weeks, 1999). But, this argument holds good in the conditions of perfectis paribus, where all the countries follow the same rules and regulations (incentive or disincentive structures) in production, processing and trading. In the absence of such a level playing field, the comparative advantage in resource endowments is of little use for deriving trade benefits. The present world scenario appears to be less conducive for free agricultural trade. In fact, it is observed that trade liberalisation is not sufficient to stimulate agricultural exports (Weeks, 1997). This is mainly attributed to the combination of other related policies such as trade, input subsidies, output prices, etc., which differ from country to country. It is further argued: "A country-by-country approach is required without prior theoretical bias as to outcome" (Weeks, 1997, p. 67).

On the other hand, market deregulation, as in the Indian case, is expected to shift the terms of trade in favour of agriculture and thus improving the agricultural performance. In the absence of deregulation, i.e., prior to 1990s, the terms of trade in India had been in favour of the industrial sector resulting in poor performance of the agricultural sector. The scenario has changed in the 1990s when the economic reforms have brought in a shift in terms of trade in favour of agriculture. Though the shift in terms of trade in favour of agriculture has not translated into agricultural growth,² some argue that changes are taking place, slowly but steadily, in the sector in terms of cropping pattern shifts towards high value crops like vegetables and horticultural crops (Gulati and Muller, 2003). While the impact of these changes are yet to reflect in the aggregate performance of the sector, the benefits or gains to the farming community are not understood in the context of liberalisation. While the impact of liberalisation has drawn a lot of attention at the theoretical level along with
