

Why should one study Radical Economics?

"Marx's critique of political economy is both an immanent criticism of bourgeois economic theory, made by showing that there is no connection between that theory's assumptions and the conclusions drawn from them, and a fundamental criticism, which maintains that by assuming its own economic relations to be natural and unchangeable the whole of bourgeois economic theory fails, and must fail, to comprehend its own society, thereby condemning itself to misapprehend its own development as well as to misconceive its state of being at any particular time."

- Paul Mattick, "Marxism and Bourgeois Economics," in Marxism, last refuge of the bourgeoisie?, Merlin Press, 1983, p. 3.
