Redesigning American Education James Coleman, Barbara Schneider, Stephen Plank, Kathryn Schiller, Roger

Shouse, Huayin Wang, 1999-02-19 Drawing on several principles of sociological theory James S Coleman and his colleagues construct a new design for American schooling The authors present compelling evidence on the deficits of our educational system compared to other countries arguing that the problems are the result of inappropriate incentives for teachers students and parents Asserting that most American school systems are driven by administrative needs the authors propose school designs that would shift the focus to student achievement output as the driving force behind public education The move from an administratively driven system to an output driven system would require the use of external standards a method of evaluating school and student performance gains over time a means of rewarding students teachers and parents for academic performance gains and the encouragement of informal norms that would support the new educational goals Basing their recommendations on two national longitudinal data sets each with a sample of over 1000 schools exhibiting variations in organizational design the authors identify specific variations that have been shown to promote growth and achievement

The Finnish Education Mystery Hannu Simola, 2014-11-20 Finnish education has been a focus of global interest since its first PISA success in 2001. After years of superficial celebration, astonishment and educational tourism, the focus has recently shifted to what is possibly the most interesting element of this Finnish success story: that Finnish schools have been effectively applying methods that go against the flow of global education policy with no testing, no inspection, no hard evaluation, no detailed national curriculum, no accountability and no hard competition. From a historical and sociological perspective, the Finnish case is not merely a linear success story but is part of a controversial and paradoxical struggle towards Utopia towards egalitarian schooling. Bringing together a collection of essays by Hannu Simola and his colleagues, this book analyses the key dimensions of schooling in Finland to provide a critical analytical and uncompromising picture of the Finnish education system. Going beyond the story of success, the book reveals the complexities of educational change but also identifies opportunities and alternatives for smart political action in complex and transnational societies. Including a selection of key chapters on Finnish education policy and governance, teacher education and classroom cultures, the book will be of interest to researchers, academics and postgraduate students in comparative education, teacher education, educational policy and educational reform.

Comprehensive Systems Design: A New Educational Technology Charles Reigeluth, Bela H. Banathy, J.R. Olson, 1993-08-11. Educational technology in the broadest sense is knowledge and competence for improving the educational process for using hardware, equipment, software, methods and underware underlying organizational structures. This volume in the Special Programme on Advanced Educational Technology presents the results of a NATO Advanced Research Workshop on educational systems design as a new educational technology. The objective of the workshop was to advance our knowledge about the comprehensive systems design approach for improving educational systems. The workshop was organized for the transdisciplinary interaction of three scientific groups representing design science, organizational systems science and educational technology. Participants were selected based on their scholarship as members of one or more of these three groups. The book opens with the framing papers sent by the editors to participants prior to the workshop, then presents five sets of thematic contributions: the conceptual and empirical contexts of comprehensive systems design; the systems design focus; a systems view of designing educational systems; the educational context of systems design; and high technology focus in systems design.
