

Old age, New Age and the age to come

A Biblical view of the future of the earth.

Chris Gousmett

Many Christians are persuaded that the world will one day come to an end, that it will be destroyed by God and replaced with something else. This world, they maintain, is corrupted by sin and is not worth saving; it is worn out and contaminated to such an extent that it must make way for a better world.

Other people, who are attracted by the ideas of the New Age movement, which is a form of modern paganism, believe that the earth does have a future, but it is a future in which there is little place for God. We all become gods ourselves through a process of evolution and growth.

Jesus on the other hand, spoke much about the age to come, the age in which the Kingdom of God would be manifested in its fullness. In that age, righteousness, peace and harmony will characterise life on earth under the rule of God himself.

What are we to make of three such disparate views of the future of the earth, especially when we consider that the first view, that the earth will be destroyed, is the one most commonly held by Christians, even though it is in direct contrast with what Jesus himself taught about the coming of the kingdom of God.

These three views can be fitted into an outline of basic conceptions about the future of the earth, which I have called Old Age, New Age and the Age to Come.

The Old Age view is that the earth will one day wear out and will be discarded and replaced by a totally different world.
