Abstract

Space medicine is fundamental to the human exploration of space. It supports survival, function and performance in this challenging and potentially lethal environment. It is international, intercultural and interdisciplinary, operating at the boundaries of exploration, science, technology and medicine. Space medicine is also the latest UK specialty to be recognized by the Royal College of Physicians in the UK and the General Medical Council. This review introduces the field of space medicine and describes the different types of spaceflight, environmental challenges, associated medical and physiological effects, and operational medical considerations. It will describe the varied roles of the space medicine doctor, including the conduct of surgery and anaesthesia, and concludes with a vision of the future for space medicine in the UK.

Space medicine doctors have a responsibility to space workers and spaceflight participants. These 'flight surgeons' are key in developing mitigation strategies to ensure the safety, health and performance of space travellers in what is an extreme and hazardous environment. This includes all phases from selection, training and spaceflight itself to post-flight rehabilitation and long-term health. The recent recognition of the specialty provides a pathway to train in this fascinating field of medicine and is a key enabler for the UK Government's commercial spaceflight ambition.

Key words: aerospace medicine; space flight; weightlessness

In 2017, the Royal College of Anaesthetists celebrated its 25th anniversary; it was also the 60th anniversary of the Russian launch of Sputnik 1 (first artificial satellite in space), and the 50th anniversary of the launch of Ariel 3, the first UK designed and constructed artificial satellite. It is fitting, therefore, that these anniversaries are marked with this review describing the recently recognised UK specialty of Aviation and Space Medicine.

The establishment of this specialty was achieved through the efforts of individuals from across a broad spectrum of medical disciplines – including several anaesthetists – reflecting its multidisciplinary character. While the discipline features elements drawn from occupational health, primary care, emergency and aviation medicine, a core feature of operational space medicine entails the support and protection of human life and physiology using state-of-the-art life support systems. This, along with the need to consider the challenges of critical care in austere environments, makes this newest of specialties familiar in many ways to those in anaesthetic practice and one to which anaesthetists will be required to make direct contributions in the future.

Space medicine can broadly be defined as: 'The practice of all aspects of preventative medicine including screening, health care delivery, and maintaining human performance in the extreme environment of space and preserving the long-term health of space travellers'.¹ Here we introduce the core concepts that underpin the theory and practice of space medicine ranging from crew selection and clinical considerations to the interface between life support systems, engineering and human factors (Fig. 1).
