

Trunk M, just west of the highway bridge. Little is known about the latter which the 1876 plat refers to as "Lester's." One source states that it sawed 1,000,000 feet of lumber in 1874.²

But these mill owners were comparatively late arrivals on Mill Creek. (See Those Who Came First.) Milo S. Wood, who eventually acquired the Brawley dam and mill site, was a river driver on Mill Creek in his youth and at one time worked with William Diver. But reference to the Wood mill in the available town proceedings does not appear until 1875 when the town board met to consider the costs of rebuilding two bridges "at Wood's Shingle mill and also across Mill Creek at Meehan's Mill." This indicates that Wood began as a shingle mill and later branched into saw mill operations. In the 1890s the mill passed to son Walter Wood who operated it until past the turn of the century when the machinery was moved to the South Side of Stevens Point.

In the 1870s and early 1880s when both the Meehan and Wood mills were in operation, a series of cribs, connected with a continuous log chain-boom on either side, were erected in the middle of the river some distance above the Wood dam in Sec 22. The logs coming downstream were separated as they approached the head of this crib boom and the ones for the Meehan mill were pushed into the channel on one side and the Wood-owned logs into the other. The logs for the Meehans, of course, were floated to the mouth of Mill Creek and caught in a boom on the Wisconsin River as the Meehan mill was not on Mill Creek.

A blacksmith shop, boarding house and store were operated by the firm of Milo Wood & Sons. Two account books survive the store, the first entry of one dated June 16, 1892 was a carry-over from a previous ledger. In April 1892 the charge accounts include, inter alia, these entries:

G. Barden (for piling wood)	10# sugear (sugar)	.50
M. S. Wood & Sons,	10# tea	3.50
