

THE ELECTRIFIED STATES OF AMERICA

Electric end use is on the rise. Nearly 40% of homes in the United States are primarily heated by electricity and electric vehicles comprised 3.4% of all light-duty vehicle sales at the end of 2021. Yet, where electric demand is growing and how distribution affects the grid varies from state-to-state.

This map shows the share of electricity to end-use energy in each state.

The more energy-intensive states are those with older buildings, the older stock of cars and trucks, energy-intensive manufacturing, and higher levels of industrial activity. States with lower energy intensity are those with newer buildings, newer cars and trucks, and less industrial activity.

At 100%, Vermont has the highest share of electric end-use energy.

Electricity use is concentrated in California, where it accounts for nearly 20% of the nation's total.
