remained her touchstones and she never lost her longing for home. She often thought of the gorgeous Cypriot churches and their icons. One day an art dealer offers her a chance to buy Cyprian icons stolen during the war. Icons hold a special place in the hearts of many Greek Cypriots. They are not just masterpieces; they are artistic manifestations of faith and a gateway to the divine. Outraged, Tasoula sets out on a quest to repatriate these artifacts. An immensely difficult task as icons often lack provenance in the eyes of the law. But she is determined. Yet the road to The Munich Case, the largest art trafficking sting in European history, is filled with mind games, subterfuge, global politics, and a shady figure named Van Rijn whose motives are never entirely clear.
